2018 NISSAN NAVARA ARRIVES

Modified rear suspension, enhanced tech and more standard safety gear in 2018 ute range.

The latest in a series of running changes Nissan has made to the Navara ute range arrived in March, with the main differences being improvements to the rear suspension to better handle laden and unladen driving, while the standard range of safety tech now applies to more variants in the range.

Dual cab versions of the SL, ST and ST-X model grades get the suspension upgrade, complemented by improvements in the steering and other minor, but no less practical enhancements.

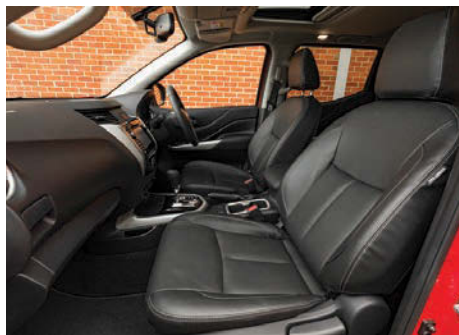

Safety features have also been enhanced for 2018, with lower grades gaining previously optional or unavailable safety tech.

DUAL RATE SPRINGS

The knock on past Navaras has been its rear suspension, so Nissan has addressed this by adding dual rate springs to the SL, ST and ST-X dual cab, for an improved ride both in regular driving, but more specifically with a load and when towing.

Nissan says the updates are the result of extensive testing and have been implemented to suit Australian conditions.

The new dual-rate rear spring system has an integrated lower and higher spring rate that provides a comfortable ride in unladen and light payload conditions, yet allows for a higher payload to be carried without compromising stance, ride or handling quality.

Leather-accented seating is a $1,500 option, limited to the King Cab ST-X auto and all dual cab ST-X grades.

Incorporated into this is a dynamic rebound damper. When laden, the damper is designed to contact the chassis rail which causes the damper to compress and the resistance to increase – reducing lateral body movement and improving handling and stability.

SHARPER STEERING, STRONGER SAFETY

Complementing the suspension upgrade on the SL, ST and ST-X dual cab, these model grades also get an upgrade to the steering, making manoeuvring easier, especially at low speeds.

The steering ratio has been reduced from 21.5:1 to a lower 19.0:1, so less steering wheel movement is needed to get the turn angle required.

The linear steering ratio has increased, from 44mm/rev to 49mm/rev, so that each time the steering wheel has turned one full revolution, the tie-rod moves 49mm. The result is that the lock-to-lock ratio has been reduced from 4.1 turns to 3.4.

New safety and technology updates include a 360-degree Around View Monitor Upgrades to the RX and ST dual cab pickups, in both 4x2 and 4x4, come with minor price increases.

Steering upgrades on the SL, ST and ST-X dual cabs reduce lock-to-lock steering wheel turns and improve manoeuvrability.

that's standard on all ST-X grades, while all dual cabs now come with second row ISOFix child seat mounting anchors.

Rear view cameras are now fitted to all pickup variants, while satellite navigation has been added to the King Cab ST.

OTHER ADDITIONS

On all SL, ST and ST-X models manufactured from June, 2018, a digital speedometer will be added to the instrument cluster, while tie-down hook points will be either increased in number or re-positioned to help better secure loads.

On RX, SL and ST Pickup grades, tie down hook positions have been lowered, while on ST-X grades with Utili-track, there are four additional tie-down hooks located lower within the tub.

“Making a great vehicle even better is something we as a company always strive for, and with the revisions on the 2018 Nissan Navara we have achieved this,” said Stephen Lester, Nissan Australia’s managing director.

“Incorporating more safety and technology, the biggest changes are under the metal with updates to suspension and steering.

“Whether it is being used by trade professionals or active families, we hope the 2018 upgrades sway ute buyers towards the Nissan Navara. It is an extremely capable vehicle.”

SMALL HIKES

Most the 2018 Navara range is unchanged on price, with the exceptions including the King Cab RX 4x4 manual pickup, which is up $300 to $37,290. In the dual cab range, the premium ST-X is unchanged, while RX and ST grades increase by between $200 and $500.

The full list of price increases is as follows*:

RX	4x4	6MT	KING CAB PICKUP	$37,290 (+$300)
RX	4X2	6MT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$33,490 (+$500)
RX	4X2	7AT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$35,990 (+$500)
ST	4X2	6MT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$40,190 (+$200)
ST	4X2	7AT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$42,690 (+$200)
RX	4X4	7AT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$42,990 (+$500)
ST	4X4	6MT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$47,190 (+$200)
ST	4X4	7AT	DUAL CAB PICKUP	$49,690 (+$200)

The updated 2018 Nissan Navara range is available now.

NISSAN X-TRAIL IS GLOBAL #1

According to data from market research experts JATO, Nissan’s X-Trail was the world’s top-selling SUV last year.

Known as the Rogue in some markets (including North America), the X-Trail saw 814,496 sales in 2017, of which Australia contributed 18,955 units. That global total was a 6.5 per cent increase on X-Trail sales in 2016 and enough for it to register as the world’s fourth best-selling car overall.

Since its launch here in 2001, more than 200,000 X-Trails have been sold across three generations, of which the first has been the most popular – to date – with 71,193 units, but the current third generation is not far behind, with 68,661 sales up to the end of February, 2018.

Currently available in three petrol grades - entry ST, mid-spec ST-L and range topping Ti – as well as TS and TL with the 2.0-litre turbo-diesel, the current Nissan X-Trail family starts from $28,490 for the ST petrol manual, with the diesel range beginning at $35,990 for the CVT TS (prices exclude on road costs).

RAM 1500 COMING TO AUSTRALIA

RAM Trucks Australia are set to broaden their locally-available range, confirming in March that the RAM 1500 will hit the Australian market this year.

Competing against Ford's F-150 in the US, the RAM 1500 features the same dual cab cabin as the RAM 2500 and 3500 models already available here, but unlike those models, the 1500 will be powered by a 5.7-litre petrol V8 engine. That means torque will be down compared to the 6.7-litre turbo-diesels in the 2500 and 3500, but power should be higher – best in class, according to the importers.

Full specs haven't been released (and won't be until closer to local launch), but if the Australian units are similar to RAM 1500s currently offered in North America, expect 295kW and 556Nm from the Hemi V8, matched to an 8-speed automatic transmission, instead of the 6-speed auto used in the 2500/3500.

As well as the best power in its class, RAM Trucks Australia claim the RAM 1500 will deliver best-in-class towing, cargo space and cabin size. Again, no specifics have been provided at this stage, but towing capacity should be up to 4600kg, with payload at 675kg (based on a 1.93 x 1.68m load bed), if it follows the American spec for a 4x4 crew cab with a standard load bed. That spacious cabin has a total interior volume of 3,548lt, with abundant head (104cm front, 101cm rear), shoulder (167cm front and rear) and leg room (104cm front and 102cm rear – all based on US measures; essentially the same as the 2500 and 3500.

Like the larger models, the RAM 1500 will come to Australia in LHD, before the body is separated from the chassis for the addition of the RHD-specific steering gear, dash layout, heating and ventilation, mirrors and other parts. The level of engineering involved means the RAM 1500 is classified as a re-manufactured vehicle, rather than a converted one, with the work backed by a 3-year/100,000km warranty.

Pricing and full specs on the new RAM 1500 will be announced closer to local release.

HOLDEN RELEASE NEW COLORADO LSX

Holden's successful "LSX" pack for the Colorado dual cab has returned for 2018 and is available on both ute and cab-chassis body styles.

Released nationally in mid-March, but limited to only 800 units for the ute and 200 for the cab chassis, the MY18 take on the LSX – an upgrade on the LS – adds a number of practical and cosmetic features familiar from past LSX offerings.

Wheelarch flares and black 18-inch wheels shod with all-terrain tyres are common to both body styles, while the cab chassis LSX adds a genuine Holden aluminium tray.

The LSX ute adds an all-black grille at the front, while an extended sports bar and compatible soft tonneau cover are added to the ute tub. The tailgate gains a large, reversed Colorado decal and more subtle Colorado badging on the extended sports bar.

There are no changes to the LS-grade drivetrain, brakes, suspension or interior with the LSX package, so that means a 2.8lt turbo diesel producing 147kW and 470Nm, matched to a 6-speed manual or 6-speed auto.

"We know a lot of our Colorado customers want to make their truck stand out from the crowd and accessories are a great way to do that," said Holden's Executive Director – Marketing, Mark Harland.

"Colorado LSX combines some of our most striking and impactful accessories - inspired by the 2016 Colorado Xtreme concept car – while maintaining exceptional customer value."

The Colorado LSX is currently priced from $44,990 drive away for the crew cab ute with manual transmission, against regular pricing of $51,495 (excl. ORCs, $2,200 premium for auto transmission). Listed RRP on the LSX Crew Cab chassis is $50,055, but no driveaway deal has been offered on that variant.

See your Holden dealer for more details.

ALFA ROMEO STELVIO REACHES AUS

The first SUV from Alfa Romeo – the Stelvio – has arrived in Australia.

Alfa's mid-size, premium SUV comes with a choice of 2.0-litre turbo petrol or 2.2-litre turbo diesel engines, both of which are matched to an 8-speed automatic and Alfa's Q4 intelligent AWD system.

The turbo petrol delivers 148kW/330Nm and 7.0lt/100km economy, while the turbo diesel produces 154kW/470Nm and a miserly 4.8lt/100km.

The Q4 acts like a rear-wheel drive vehicle in regular conditions, sending all torque to the rear axle, but the system can transfer up to 50 per cent of torque to the front axle.

This can be refined further via the Alfa DNA Drive Mode Selector, which also alters throttle response, transmission shift times, suspension and steering weight. 'Dynamic' is the most aggressive of the three modes, designed for performance driving on tarmac, with 'natural' calibrated for everyday driving, while 'Advanced Efficiency' maximises fuel economy.

Measuring 4687mm x 1903mm x 1648mm - 1671mm on the diesel - (LxWxH), the 5-seat Stelvio offers up to 1600 litres of cargo volume.

Standard features include 19-inch alloy wheels, Bi-Xenon headlamps, a power tailgate, reversing camera, front and rear parking sensors and driver assistance features like Hill Descent Control, Lane Departure Warning, Blind Spot Monitoring and AEB with Pedestrian Detection.

Inside, premium features include leather upholstery, power-adjustable front seats, a leather-trimmed steering wheel, 7-inch digital instrument display, 8.8-inch central infotainment screen with 3D navigation, dual-zone climate control and an 8-speaker sound system.

Pricing starts at $65,900 for the turbo petrol, with the turbo diesel listing at $67,900 (excl. ORCs).

A $5,000 'Veloce Pack' option adds features like sports alloys and Koni suspension, as well as sports pedals, sports front seats and a sports steering wheel.

There's also a Stelvio 'First Edition', limited to only 300 units for Australia (200 diesel, 100 petrol), that includes all the Veloce Pack gear and adds a panoramic sunroof, rear privacy glass and a 14-speaker Harman Kardon 900W premium audio system.

Priced at $71,900 for the petrol and $73,900 for the diesel, the Stelvio First Edition claims more than $8,000 in extra equipment for only $6,000 above the regular Stelvio's price.

URUS MAKES AUSTRALIAN DEBUT

Lamborghini's "Super Sport Utility Vehicle", the Urus, has reached Australia, with a demonstration unit arriving in March ahead of the first customer cars in Q4 this year.

Featured in detail in JUST 4x4s #341, the Urus is aimed at the premium, luxury territory occupied by Porsche, Bentley and Mercedes-Benz.

Powered by a 4.0-litre twin-turbo petrol V8 producing 478kW at 6,000rpm and 850Nm at 2,250rpm, the Urus accelerates from 0-100kmh in 3.6 seconds and can hit a top-speed of 305km/h, making it the fastest production SUV currently available.

Aiding its on-road performance is an 8-speed automatic transmission, active torque vectoring and rear-wheel steering, as well as adaptive air suspension and active roll stabilisation.

Torque split is normally 40/60 front/rear, but up to 70 per cent of torque can go to the front wheels, or up to 87 per cent to the rears.

Driving modes include Strada (road), Neve (snow), Sport and Corsa (race), with Terra (off-road) and Sabbia (sand) optional; all of which selectable via the 'Tamburo' driving dynamics controller.

Despite its clear road bias, Lamborghini claims the Urus is off-road capable, thanks in part to the torque vectoring, integrated front diff and a Torsen central locking diff.

Other features include carbon ceramic brakes, with 21-inch wheels standard, but 23-inch optional.

Styling is typically Lamborghini outside, but designed to be aerodynamically efficient, while inside, there's a multi-function steering wheel, head-up display, full TFT instrumentation and multi-function 18-way adjustable front seats, while the rear bench seat can be optioned out for a pair of bucket seats.

The third-generation Lamborghini Infotainment System is standard, offering media, navigation, phone and vehicle status info across two screens, the lower of which is handwriting-compatible.

Driver assistance tech includes what Lamborghini calls "a comprehensive level of safety, security and driver assistance", with other, more advanced functions like traffic management, top-view camera and trailer coupling optional.

When it arrives here in Q4, the Lamborghini Urus will be priced from $390,000, including GST and LCT, but excluding on-roads.

HYUNDAI UNVEILS NEW SANTA FE

The all-new, fourth-generation version of Hyundai's Santa Fe seven-seat large SUV has been officially revealed ahead of its Australian market release in a few months.

With new styling, the Gen 4 Santa Fe looks like more of a premium offering than the current version, with slimmer headlights and larger DRLs. The grille uses a pattern reminiscent of Range Rover or Mercedes-Benz, and is now connected to the headlights by a chromed bar.

At the rear, the tail lights are slimmer, and the tailgate angle steeper, while the profile view shows a higher bodyside crease (above the door handles), larger C-to-D pillar window opening and flatter wheelarch flares.

Lighter than the current version, with a stronger body and improved NVH levels, the Gen 4 Santa Fe is slightly larger and rolls on a longer (by 65mm) 2765mm wheelbase that delivers more second-row legroom.

Those second-row seats now feature a one-touch slide and fold system to make for easier access to the third-row seats. In those rear seats, there's more headroom and greater visibility thanks to the reshaped side window glass and a larger rear screen.

Running gear has been tweaked, with the 2.2-litre, 144kW/436Nm turbo diesel losing a little torque, but claimed to be more fuel efficient. Part of this can be attributed to a new 8-speed auto transmission, which replaces the current 6-speed. Drive is still to the front wheels, but the HTRAC on-demand AWD system remains, able to send up to 50 per cent of torque to the rear wheels in Sport mode. In Comfort mode, 35 per cent goes to the rear axle, while in Eco mode, it's 100 per cent FWD.

Whether the 2.4-litre petrol four and 3.3-litre petrol V6 will carry over has yet to be revealed, but it's likely the latter will be dropped for some sort of hybrid system, even if that system isn't offered in the Australian market.

Suspension has come in for modification, too; said to be stiffer without compromising ride comfort. Hyundai says that Australian-delivered Santa Fes will have specific suspension tuning following extensive local testing.

Being a family seven-seater, safety kit is impressive, with industry firsts that are part of the SmartSense system including 'Rear Occupant Alert' that detects if passengers are still in the rear seats when the driver leaves the car, and 'Rear Cross-Traffic Collision Avoidance Assist' that detects vehicles approaching from the rear and automatically applies the brakes, if required.

New tech includes a full head-up display and a Qi wireless charging pad, while the existing infotainment system largely carries over, with an 8.0-inch touch screen that has Apple CarPlay/Android Auto compatibility and rear-view camera display.

Local deliveries of the new Santa Fe are expected from July, with full specs, model range and pricing to be revealed closer to local launch.

NISSAN ANNOUNCES 'TERRA' SUV

A new vehicle from Nissan's frame and LCV division was recently launched. The 'Terra' is a frame-based SUV built off the Navara and along the lines of similar offerings from Ford (Everest from Ranger) and Toyota (Kluger from HiLux).

As part of their 'M.O.V.E. to 2022' plan, Nissan aims to increase frame-based and LCV sales by 40 per cent by 2022. To achieve those sorts of numbers, the Terra is being aimed at the world's largest car market – China – with sales to commence there later this year.

Whether the Terra will be sold here in Australia, possibly as a replacement for the Pathfinder SUV, has not been revealed, but seems unlikely as the focus with this model and the overall M.O.V.E. to 2022 plan is said to be high-volume Asian markets.

RANGE ROVER UNVEILS SV COUPE

Two-door premium model will be most expensive Range Rover ever

The star turn from Range Rover at this year's Geneva Motor Show was what the four-wheel drive specialist claims is the world's first full size luxury SUV coupe.

Pitched as Range Rover's answer to premium SUVs from Bentley and Lamborghini, the 'SV Coupe' will be the most expensive production Range Rover ever, priced from £240,000 (around AU$345,000 direct conversion), while a build-run of only 999 units will ensure exclusivity.

Of that total, only 20 are guaranteed for Australia, with local Land Rover dealers now taking orders ahead of an expected Q1, 2019 arrival.

TWO-DOOR AND MORE

While it looks like a simple two-door conversion of an existing Range Rover, the SV Coupe has been comprehensively restyled, with only the bonnet and lower part of the tailgate carrying over unchanged from the four-door model.

Built by Jaguar Land Rover's SVO (Special Vehicle Operations) division, the SV Coupe is actually marginally longer than a four-door Range Rover, as well as being slightly lower.

A full panoramic sunroof is standard, with unique treatments of the side vents, grille and bumpers, as well as a Range Rover first in the availability of 23-inch wheels.

The oversized doors that define the SV Coupe feature a power-closing function and frameless glass, while blacked-out B and C pillars give the "floating roof" effect that has been applied to other Range Rover models.

Each SV Coupe will be hand-built at SVO to customer specifications, guided by in-house design staff.

Eight standard exterior paint colours are available, including four that are debuting on the SV Coupe, as well as a number of finishes (tri-coat, pearl, satin matte, etc.), but via SVO's bespoke personalisation service, a huge range of alternative paint options and interior finishes are available.

That personalisation extends to the interior, with the four-seat arrangement - trimmed in semi-aniline leather with a unique diamond quilting pattern - available in a choice of four colours, with four different two-toning options (where the front seats carry a different colour trim to the backs) also available.

A choice of three different timber veneer finishes are offered for the steering wheel and dash, including 'Nautica', which Range Rover describe as a fusion of walnut and sycamore.

KEEPING THE POWER AND ABILITY

Using the same 5.0-litre supercharged petrol V8 as the Range Rover SVAutobiography LWB, the SV Coupe knocks on the door of the performance offered by the smaller and lighter Range Rover Sport SVR.

With 416kW and 700Nm, the SV Coupe can accelerate from 0 to 100km/h in 5.3 seconds and hit a 266km/h top speed, making it the fastest ever full-size Range Rover.

The V8 is matched to an 8-speed automatic and permanent four-wheel drive as standard, with a two-speed transfer case.

An 'Active Locking Rear Differential' is also standard, as is Land Rover's Terrain Response 2 system, featuring Dynamic, Eco, Comfort, Grass/Gravel/Snow, Mud and Ruts, Sand and Rock Crawl programmes to ensure that, while the SV Coupe has gained luxury, it hasn't lost ability.

At 263mm, ground clearance is only marginally lower - 8mm - compared to the standard Range Rover, but is automatically adjustable by up to 50mm below standard or up to 75mm above in 'Off-Road 2 Ride Height' mode.

On smooth tarmac, the automatic air suspension lowers by 15mm at speeds of 105km/h to enhance stability and minimise fuel consumption.

Off-road, the suspension can cleverly raise itself by an additional 30-40mm millimetres above the Off-Road 2 maximum if the in-vehicle sensors detect an obstacle ahead. This can also be manually increased by a further 30-40mm.

Approach/departure/breakover angles are listed at 31/25/26.5 degrees, while wading depth is an impressive 900mm. Towing capacity is 3500kg, with Advanced Tow Assist fitted.

Most in-car functions are controlled by Land Rover's InControl Touch Pro Duo system, which in the SV Coupe, features a 10-inch display and separate 10-inch control panel.

A 12-inch Interactive Driver Display is supplemented with a 10-inch full-colour Head-Up Display that shows turn information (including street names), slope and wheel information, cruise control, RPM and even gear setting.

The standard sound system is a 1700w, 23-speaker, Meridian 3D Signature unit with dual-channel subwoofer and Trifield 3D technology for what Range Rover calls optimum sound quality.

TOP 5 4X4 TOURERS

WORDS Dean Mellor

When it comes to 4x4 touring you want a vehicle that's as good on the road as it is off it. It needs to be comfortable, capable and reliable, and able to fit you and all of your gear... and maybe haul a camper or caravan.

Of course, everyone has different priorities when it comes to choosing a 4x4 to suit their needs, so here are our Top 5 4x4s in five different categories: large, midsize, ute-based, compact and ute.

LARGE 4X4 WAGON: TOYOTA LANDCRUISER 200 SERIES

Whether you're driving through the heart of the continent or towing a caravan on the big lap, the Toyota LandCruiser 200 is the large 4x4 wagon to do it in. Available with a choice of V8 engines – a potent 4.6-litre petrol engine or a stump-pulling 4.5-litre twin-turbo-diesel – the Cruiser has the grunt to get the job done. It's the oiler that's our pick as the best all-rounder, especially for off-roaders who want the economy and touring-range benefits of a diesel engine, and for caravanners who want the pulling power that a stonking 650Nm provides, and a 3500kg braked towing capacity.

The 200 Series TDV8 is available in GX, GXL, VX and Sahara trim levels, all with a six-speed automatic transmission. Standard safety equipment across the 5-star ANCAP LandCruiser range includes Toyota's Multi Terrain ABS, vehicle stability control and active traction control. The VX and Sahara models are equipped with Toyota's Kinetic Dual Suspension System (KDSS), while top-spec Sahara also has a blind spot monitor with cross traffic alert, and a pre-collision safety system.

Across range the 200 Series is equipped with Crawl Control with Off-road Turn Assist, and Hill Start Assist Control. The five-seat GX has 17-inch steel wheels while the eight-seat GXL gets 17-inch alloys, as well as privacy glass, side steps, smart entry and start, dual-zone climate control air conditioning, reversing camera, 6.1-inch touchscreen display, satnav, LED headlamps with auto levelling and LED clearance lamps. On top of these features the VX is equipped with 18-inch alloy wheels, Toyota's Multi-Terrain Select (MTS) system, rain-sensing wipers, four-zone climate control air conditioning, a 9-inch Electro Multi Vision touchscreen, bi-LED headlamps with dynamic auto levelling, daytime running lamps, moon roof, leather accented trim and faux woodgrain interior bits, power adjustable front seats and front and rear parking sensors. The top-spec Sahara adds automatic high beam, front- and second-row seat heaters, rear-seat entertainment system, cool box, driver's seat memory function, power tailgate, four-camera multi-terrain monitor, and active cruise control.

On the road the LandCruiser is supremely comfortable, with plush suspension and good isolation from road and wind noise. Performance from the TDV8 is impressive given the Cruiser's hefty kerb weight (2640-2740kg), and there's a claimed 200kW on tap at 3600rpm and 650Nm from 1600-2600rpm. As you'd expect from such a heavy vehicle, there's a fair bit of body roll when cornering, but the KDSS fitted to VX and Sahara models overcomes this trait without adversely affecting wheel travel when driving off-road.

The Cruiser features a full-time 4x4 system with a lockable centre diff and a two-speed transfer case that provides a low-range reduction of 2.618:1. While overall low-range in first gear is a relatively tall 34.109:1, the torque-multiplying effect of the auto combined with the engine's 650Nm peak ensures there's plenty of grunt to climb steep hills and amble over off-road obstacles. There's also loads of wheel travel, especially at the rear, and the Cruiser offers good ground clearance for off-road work.

For those who need the space offered by a large wagon, the Cruiser is the king of the full-size 4x4s. It offers class-leading towing capacity, supreme on-road comfort and fantastic off-road capability.

MIDSIZE 4X4 WAGON: TOYOTA PRADO

The Toyota Prado has always been one of the most popular midsize 4x4 wagons on the market and the latest model is better than ever, offering impressive on-road comfort and handling, improved 3000kg maximum braked towing capacity, additional safety features and revised equipment levels.

The Prado has a 2.8-litre four-cylinder turbo-diesel engine. The GX and GXL models are available with either a six-speed manual or six-speed automatic transmission, while the higher grade VX and Kakadu models are available with the auto only. The GX is a five-seater (seven-seats are optional) while the other grades all come standard with seven seats.

The current Prado has a 5-star ANCAP rating. All auto models in the Prado range now come with Toyota Safety Sense+ which includes Pre-Collision Safety system with Pedestrian Detection, Lane Departure Alert, Automatic High Beam and Active Cruise Control. Autos also get Downhill Assist Control and Hill-start Assist Control. All models are equipped with a reversing camera, seven SRS airbags, Vehicle Stability Control and Active-Traction Control, while the GXL adds safety features such as rear parking sensors, LED headlamps, LED fog lamps and daytime running lights. In addition the VX and Kakadu also have a auto-levelling headlamps, rain-sensing wipers, front and rear parking sensors, blind spot monitor, rear cross traffic alerts and Panoramic and Multi-Terrain monitor. Exclusive to Kakadu is Toyota's active suspension (called Kinetic Dynamic Suspension System), Multi-Terrain Select System, Crawl Control and Back Guide Monitor.

All Prados autos are now equipped with an 8-inch colour touchscreen display with Toyota Link and satnav, while autos also score what Toyota calls an Electroluminescent combimeter with multi-information display. The GX and GXL are fitted with 17-inch alloy wheels while the GXL also has roof rails and side steps, privacy glass, three-zone climate control air conditioning and rear differential lock (auto only). The VX adds 18-inch alloys, illuminated side steps, leather accented seats, heated seats (front and second rows), ventilated front seats, cool box and premium sound system. Kakadu also has a moon-roof, power fold-down third-row seats and rear-seat entertainment system.

The Prado's engine makes claimed peak outputs of 130kW at 3400rpm and 420Nm at 1400rpm (manual)/450Nm at 1600rpm (auto). The six-speed auto offers smooth shifts but can be a little fussy on the open road, swapping between fifth and sixth at highway speeds. While on-road performance isn't scintillating, the Prado accelerates well enough, and the engine is relatively quiet and smooth. Autos can now tow up to 3000kg (max. for the manual is 2500kg) and the Prado offers a decent payload capacity

The Prado range

The Prado Kakadu gets leather trim and a Panoramic and Multi-Terrain monitor

Prado VX

Prados with the auto transmission offer a 3000kg towing capacity between 535-675kg depending on model grade. And a 150-litre fuel capacity ensures the Prado offers excellent touring range.

Thanks in part to good rear axle articulation and relatively good front wheel travel, the Prado is a strong performer off the road. Plenty of ground clearance, decent low-range gearing, electronic traction control and a standard rear diff lock (in GXL auto and above) add to capability when the tracks turn rough.

When it comes to midsize 4x4 wagons the conservative yet effective Prado certainly is hard to beat, both on the road and off it.

The Everest has a clever Terrain Management system for different off-road conditions

The Everest Trend

The top-spec Everest Titanium is well equipped

UTE-BASED 4X4 WAGON: FORD EVEREST

Around 25 years ago the market was awash with ute-based 4x4 wagons such as the Toyota 4Runner, Nissan Pathfinder and Ford Raider, but there was no disguising their commercial-vehicle origins. As the popularity of 4x4 wagons grew, these ute-based offerings disappeared and more refined vehicles took their place, but recently the ute-based offerings have made a comeback, with several models on offer including the Ford Ranger, Holden Trailblazer, Isuzu MU-X, Mitsubishi Pajero Sport and Toyota Fortuner.

Of the current generation ute-based 4x4 wagons, the Ford Everest is our pick. Packed with high-tech features and endowed with a well-sorted chassis and suspension set-up, the Everest disguises its commercial-vehicle origins well. There are three 4x4 model grades (Ambiente, Trend and Titanium) and they all score a five-star ANCAP rating, with standard safety features including Dynamic Stability Control, Traction Control, Rollover Mitigation, Trailer Sway Control, and dual front airbags, side chest airbags, side head airbags (curtains) and driver knee airbag.

The Everest offers strong on-road performance courtesy of its impressive 3.2-litre five-cylinder turbo-diesel engine that makes a claimed 143kW of power at 3000rpm and 470Nm of torque from 1750-2500rpm. The engine is mated to a smooth-shifting six-speed auto transmission and tall overall gearing provides relaxed highway cruising. It has a 3000kg braked-trailer towing capacity and a generous 757kg payload.

The seven-seat Everest offers class-leading ride comfort and a sizeable and well-equipped interior. Standard features on the base-spec Ambiente include 17-inch alloy wheels, a 10-speaker audio system with 8-inch colour touchscreen and Apple CarPlay/Android Auto, and a reversing camera. The Trend adds 18-inch alloys, Driver Assist Technology (adaptive cruise control, forward collision alert and lane keeping system), satnav, automatic high beam and a power tailgate. In addition the top-spec Titanium features leather trim, power operated third-row seats, panoramic sunroof, Active Park Assist, Cross Traffic Alert, tyre pressure monitor, LED headlights and 20-inch alloy wheels.

Off-road capability is impressive. The Everest offers 225mm of ground clearance, good wheel travel, great low-range gearing, an effective electronic traction control system and a rear differential lock. It also features a terrain Management System with different modes for different off-road conditions, including Snow/Grass/Gravel, Sand and Rock modes.

Ford has pitched the Everest to compete with the likes of Toyota's Prado, so it costs more than the other ute-based 4x4 wagon offerings, but if it's within your reach it really is one of the best 4x4 tourers on the market.

COMPACT 4X4: JEEP WRANGLER

Touring in a two-door Jeep Wrangler? You've got to be kidding, right? Well, plenty of people do it, especially when there's off-road driving to be done at the end of a day's drive. And the Wrangler is one of the few compact 4x4s left on the market with genuine off-road capability.

The new JL Wrangler is just about to hit the Aussie market, so now could be a great time to grab a bargain on an outgoing JK Wrangler, which is available in Sport and Overland spec levels. The two-door Wrangler is only available with Jeep's 3.6-litre petrol V6 engine, which can be mated to a six-speed manual gearbox or five-speed auto in Sport trim, while the Overland is only available with the auto.

Safety features on the Wrangler include traction control, electronic stability control, electronic roll mitigation, trailer sway control, two front and two side air bags, a tyre pressure monitor and a roll bar. The Overland model also has a reversing camera, auto headlamps and rear window defroster. When tested in 2012, the two-door JK Wrangler received a four-star ANCAP rating.

There's no doubt the Wrangler is pretty basic. The Sport has features such as 18-inch alloy wheels, removable doors, a removable soft-top, fold-flat windscreen, cruise control, fog lamps and washout interior. The Overland scores leather seats, heated front seats, removable hardtop, 6.5-inch touchscreen with satnav, premium audio system and side steps. There are loads of optional accessories in the Mopar catalogue, from chrome bits, off-road gear including rock sliders, diff covers and lift kits, and even bumpers, bonnets and tow hooks.

On-road performance from the 3.6-litre V6 is reasonably good but you have to keep revs up to get the best out of the engine. Claimed peak power is 209kW at 6350rpm and torque peaks at 347Nm at 4300rpm. The five-speed auto is the pick of the transmissions as it helps to mask the engine's lack of low-rpm torque. Although Jeep claims an average combined fuel consumption figure of 11.3L/100km, you can expect the Wrangler to be thirstier than that; after all, it has the aerodynamic profile of a brick outhouse. With live axles front and rear and a relatively short wheelbase, the Wrangler's on-road ride quality is choppy, but the coil springs do a reasonable job of soaking up bumps. Around town (and on bush tracks) the Wrangler is quite manoeuvrable thanks to its compact dimensions (it's only 4223mm long and has a 10.4m turning circle).

Compact dimensions make the Wrangler manoeuvrable both around town and on tight tracks

It's off-road that the Wrangler shines. It has an impressive 241mm of ground clearance, good approach, departure and ramp-over angles, a 760mm wading depth, good axle articulation and decent low-range reduction.

As a two-up tourer the Wrangler is more capable and practical than you might think. It's probably not the sort of vehicle you'd want to take on an around-Oz adventure or a remote-area expedition, but what compact 4x4 is? The Wrangler is a competent compact 4x4 on the road and the most capable compact 4x4 off it. And if you need more space there's always the long-wheelbase four-door Unlimited version.

DUAL-CAB 4X4 UTE: VOLKSWAGEN AMAROK V6

With its potent turbo-diesel V6 engine mated to a slick eight-speed auto transmission, the Volkswagen Amarok is the best performing 4x4 dual-cab ute on the road. It's also one of the best handling utes, one of the most comfortable and, despite a lack of low-range gearing, it's still a very capable vehicle off the road.

The Amarok V6 is available in Sportline, Highline and Ultimate trim levels. All are equipped with safety features including driver and passenger front and side air bags, electronic traction control, stability control, trailer sway control, active roll-over protection, front and rear parking sensors, rear-view camera, auto headlights, rain-sensing wipers and fog lights. The Highline and Ultimate add bi-Xenon headlights with daytime running lights and auto self-leveling, as well as front fog lights with static cornering lights.

Standard equipment on the Sportline includes 18-inch alloy wheels, dual-zone climate control air conditioning, cruise control, 6.3-inch touchscreen with Apple Carplay/Android Auto and monochrome multi-function display. The Highline adds an alarm, sidesteps, sports bar, tyre pressure monitor and satnav. In addition the top-spec Ultimate scores illuminated sidesteps, a longer sports bar, a tub-liner coating, 19-inch or 20-inch alloy wheels, a colour multi-function display, aluminium-finish accelerator and brake pedals, steering wheel gear-shift paddles, leather trim, 14-way adjustable power driver's seat and heated front seats.

The Amarok V6 delivers on-road performance like no other ute thanks to its 3.0-litre turbo-diesel engine that makes a claimed 165kW of power from 2500-4500rpm and 550Nm of torque from 1500-2500rpm. The engine also features an overboost function that's claimed to push peak power up to 180kW for limited periods under full acceleration, and Volkswagen claims a 0-100km/h time of just 7.9 seconds for the Amarok V6. The eight-speed auto transmission is sublime in its shifts, which are barely perceptible on the road at partial throttle.

As well as strong performance the Amarok offers the liveliest handling of the current crop of dual-cab 4x4 utes. It has a wide track that limits body roll, delivers good steering feedback and offers a compliant ride. It's also a quiet and relaxed tourer on the open road and a claimed combined fuel consumption figure of 9.0L/100km is impressive considering the performance on offer.

Off-road capability is impressive given the Amarok's lack of low-range gearing. Features include an effective traction control system with Off-Road ABS with Hill Descent, and a Hill Holder function. Stated ground clearance is only 192mm but you wouldn't know it when driving the Amarok V6 off-road. Good approach, departure and ramp-over angles help in this regard. Wading depth is low for the class at 500mm, but an aftermarket snorkel would soon sort that out.

The Amarok's tray is impressive; the widest in class (1222mm between the wheel arches) and able to accept a full-width pallet. It's also reasonably long at 1555mm.

Sitting behind the wheel of the Amarok V6 you can easily forget it's a commercial vehicle. It is a comfortable long-distance mile eater with excellent on-road manners and it surprises with its off-road capability.

On-road performance is impressive and the Trailhawk's combined fuel consumption figure is just 7.5L/100km seat 4x4 wagon that's powered by a 3.0-litre TDV6 engine mated to an eight-speed automatic transmission. It has a full-time 4x4 system called Quadra-Drive II, and adjustable-height air suspension called Quadra-Lift.

When Jeep launched its updated Grand Cherokee range in 2017, all models received electric power steering, an Eco mode on the transmission, and fitment of an acoustic windscreen and front door glass to improve in-cabin refinement. They were also equipped with LaneSense Lane Departure Warning Plus, and Parallel and Perpendicular Park Assist.

The Grand Cherokee Trailhawk is loaded with standard equipment considering its keen $74k price tag. Gear includes dual-zone climate control air conditioning, black Nappa leather seats with perforated suede inserts and red accent stitching, satnav, keyless start and entry, eight-way powered

WHAT IS THE 2017 JEEP GRAND CHEROKEE TRAILHAWK?

The Trailhawk is the most off-road capable model in Jeep's Grand Cherokee line-up and as such it wears the brand's Trail Rated badge, which essentially means it has been successfully tested in five off-road categories: Traction, Water Fording, Manoeuvrability, Articulation and Ground Clearance.

The Grand Cherokee Trailhawk is a five-

Trail Rated badge means this Grand Cherokee is the real deal

The Trailhawk lifts its wheels in undulating terrain but the Quadra-Drive II system with automatically locking centre and rear diffs ensures forward momentum is maintained front seats, heated front and rear seats, reversing camera with trailer-hitch view, 8.4-inch colour touchscreen, 18-inch alloy wheels, bi-xenon headlamps, fog lamps, daytime running lamps, rain-sensing wipers, automatic high-beam, power tailgate and dual pane panoramic sunroof.

For those who tow a trailer, the Grand Cherokee Trailhawk has a class-topping 3500kg towing capacity.

WHAT'S THE INTERIOR LIKE?

If you like black then you'll love sitting in the Grand Cherokee Trailhawk; the seats are black, the carpet is black, the trim on the window pillars is black, the headlining is black and the dash is black. And when you slide into the generously bolstered driver's seat, and adjust the driving position to suit your frame, you'll probably feel a little closed in, because the rake on the windscreen is accentuated by the thick A-pillars that curves in towards the top. It's not disconcerting, but from behind the wheel you feel like you're seated in a compact sports car rather than a large 4x4 wagon.

A large colour touchscreen and big air conditioning vents dominate the Trailhawk's dash. All of the controls are well positioned and clearly marked, especially the big radial dials for the fan and the sound system controls, and there's reasonable storage in the centre console along with a couple of cup holders. The steering wheel has controls for cruise control, audio system and phone connection, as well as paddle shifters for the eight-speed auto.

Rear occupants are provided with plenty of legroom and there's enough width across the 60:40 split/fold seat for three adults. As well as vents for the rear air conditioning, rear-seat occupants have access to their own seat-heater controls.

There's reasonable cargo space in the back of the Grand Cherokee, although load height is not fantastic. There are four luggage tie-down hooks, shopping-bag hooks and a 12V power outlet. When the back seats are folded down there's plenty of cargo length and a flat load floor.

WHAT'S IT LIKE ON THE ROAD?

If sitting in the Trailhawk's driver's seat feels a bit like a sports car then wait til you open the throttle. With healthy power and torque peaks of 184kW at 4000rpm and 570Nm at 2000rpm, acceleration is impressive on the road. The engine responds well from low revs and it has a strong midrange. And even as revs climb towards the 4500rpm redline the TDV6 continues to deliver. The eight-speed auto offers a good spread of ratios and it shifts smoothly, while engine noise is well suppressed, even at full throttle. Gearshifts can feel a little lethargic on the default Eco setting, but this can be disengaged which speeds up the response transmission response.

Drive the Trailhawk with some gusto on a smooth twisty road and it feels surprisingly agile. The electric power-assisted steering is well weighted at highway speeds and offers reasonable feedback, and the Trailhawk responds to steering inputs as well as you could expect of a vehicle with a 2340kg kerb weight. Body roll is well controlled when cornering too.

Ride quality feels quite firm on bumpy roads but it's certainly not uncomfortable, and the Trailhawk isn't upset when it hits a big bump or pothole. Road-shock isolation could be better, however, with quite a few bangs and rattles audible throughout the cabin when driving on rough and/or corrugated gravel roads.

WHAT'S IT LIKE OFF THE ROAD?

Point the Grand Cherokee Trailhawk off-road and it does exactly what is says on the 'Trail Rated' box. The Quadra-Drive II 4x4 system offers modes for Snow, Sand, Mud and Rock, or you can just leave it in Auto and let the system figure it out for itself. Raising the suspension is achieved by pushing a clearly marked button next to the mode selector, and there's another button for selecting low range. Then there's the button for the Selec-Speed with Hill Ascent Control, which is essentially an off-road cruise control system that allows you to set speed as low as 1km/h and adjust it in 1km/h increments using the paddles on the steering wheel.

No matter whether you're driving up hill or down, Selec-Speed will ensure the vehicle maintains the set target speed, so all you have to concentrate on is steering when tackling challenging off-road terrain. Selec-speed is one of the most effective systems of its kind.

The Trailhawk's electronic traction control system is also very effective, which is just as well because the limited suspension travel sees the vehicle lift its wheels high into the air on undulating terrain. The 4x4 system also features automatically locking centre and rear differentials that help maintain forward progress when the Trailhawk cocks a leg.

The 3.0-litre turbo-diesel V6 makes plenty of power and torque, and is well mated to the eight-speed auto

The original 1941 Jeep makes a cameo appearance on the Trailhawk's wheels

The colour instrument binnacle displays all the information you need

In its highest setting the Quadra-Lift air suspension provides an impressive 260mm of ground clearance, but it bangs and crashes over rough terrain as the suspension runs out of droop travel and tops out. Drop down to normal height and the suspension offer more compliance, but the trade off is a loss of ground clearance.

The Trailhawk has a removable front air dam and when removed, and with the suspension is in its highest setting, approach, departure and ramp-over angles (36.1°, 27.1° and 22.8°) are impressive. There's also good underbody protection with additional skid plates exclusive to the Trailhawk, and the Kevlar reinforced 265/60R18 Goodyear Wranglers are not only tough but offer adequate sidewall height for driving in rough terrain without fear of damaging the rims.

Claimed maximum wading depth is 508mm, which isn't fantastic, so care should be taken when fording water.

If you get stuck in the Trailhawk you won't have any problems finding the bright red recovery points at the front of the vehicle, but there are no such points at the rear.

The Trailhawk's 8.4-inch Uconnect infotainment system includes an app called Off-road Pages that displays real-time off-road information including vehicle location, altitude, the state of the locking differentials, vertical and lateral angles of the vehicle and information on vitals like oil temperature and battery voltage.

WHAT SAFETY FEATURES DOES IT GET?

The Grand Cherokee Trailhawk has a five-star ANCAP rating. Standard safety features include Lane Departure Warning, Adaptive Cruise Control with stop, Parallel and Perpendicular Park Assist, All-speed Traction

Control and Electronic Stability Control (ESC), Selec-Speed Control, Trailer-Sway Control (TSC), Forward Collision Warning with Crash Mitigation, Blind Spot Monitoring (BSM), Rear Cross Path (RCP) detection, reverse camera, front-row active head restraints, full-length side-curtain air bags and seat-mounted side thorax air bags.

SO, WHAT DO WE THINK OF THE 2017 JEEP GRAND CHEROKEE TRAILHAWK?

For those who want a large 4x4 wagon but don't need seven seats, the Grand Cherokee Trailhawk is a worthy contender. It's packed with safety features, is loaded with equipment, is an impressive on-road performer, has a 3500kg towing capacity and is a very capable off-roader. And at $74k it's good value for money.

ROOM TO

The RX-L is a seven-seat version of Lexus' popular RX luxury SUV. It has a slightly longer body and redesigned tailgate to accommodate two third-row seats, and it's available in Luxury and Sports Luxury trim levels with either petrol or hybrid drivelines.

MOVE

WORDS DEAN MELLOR

WITH SEVEN-SEAT variants accounting for one in five luxury SUV sales in Australia, Lexus decided it was time to get in on the action by extending the body length of its existing RX, reshaping the tailgate and squeezing in a couple of third-row seats.

The Lexus RX-L is a comfortable mile eater on decent roads and freeways

Even with the third-row seats in use there's enough space in the back to fit a stroller and a couple of other items

With all rear seats folded the RX-L offers a generous load space with a flat floor

WHAT IS THE 2018 LEXUS RX-L?

The Lexus RX-L is essentially a seven-seat variant of the existing five-seat RX model. To squeeze in two third-row seats, Lexus has extended the RX's body length by 110mm, raised the roof peak by 10mm and reshaped the tailgate. The second-row seats have also been raised slightly to provide enough foot room for third-row occupants. The wheelbase is the same as the five-seat RX.

At the recent launch of the RX-L range, Lexus Australia CEO Scott Thompson pointed out the importance of the RX in the local Lexus line-up. "In Australia, the Lexus RX has achieved a strong customer base with over 33,500 sold [since it was launched in 2006], accounting for more than a quarter of our cumulative volume," he said. "While our customers love it, they tell us there is just one more thing that could make it better, and that's more of it, so we've responded to their demands by creating the RX-L variants."

The seven-seat RX-L is available in a choice of petrol or hybrid drivelines in Luxury and Sports Luxury model grades. Seven-seat Luxury models cost $3280 more than their five-seat counterparts, while the premium for the seven-seat Sports Luxury is just $1630 over its five-seat counterpart.

The RX 350L is powered by a 3.5-litre petrol V6 engine that makes a claimed 216kW of power at 6300rpm, while the RX 450hL runs the Lexus Hybrid Drive system consisting a 193kW 3.5-litre petrol V6 and a 123kW electric motor that combined provide a claimed peak power output of 230kW.

The RX 350L is slightly down on power compared with its five-seat sibling; the latter's dual exhaust system has been replaced by a single exhaust in order to fit the extra seats. Other than that the powertrain is the same, with the V6 mated to an eight-speed automatic transmission and power delivered to all four wheels. The RX 450hL runs a six-step CVT and an active 4WD system with a 50kW electric rear-drive motor.

There's an $8470 premium for the hybrid variant of the RX-L, which not only provides 30kW more than the petrol-only version, but also significantly better fuel economy, with a combined cycle of just 6.0L/100km (down from 10.6L/100km). More performance and better fuel economy? It's little wonder that hybrids account for almost 30 per cent of all Lexus sales in Australia, despite their price premium.

"Since the RX and GS hybrids debuted in 2006, we've sold more than 22,000 hybrids in this country," said Scott Thompson at the RX-L launch. "Last year hybrids accounted for almost 30 per cent of our sales; a higher proportion than the rest of the world. In fact, outside Japan, the United States and Western Europe, Australian customers have bought and impressive 11 per cent of all RX hybrids.”

Both the RX 350L and RX 450hL are available in Luxury and Sports Luxury model grades. Standard equipment on the Luxury includes LED headlights, DRLs and front fog lamps, an eight-inch audio display screen, satnav, 12 speaker sound system, 20-inch alloy wheels, smart entry and start, roof rails and rear privacy glass. The front seats have 10-way power adjustment, and front- and second-row seats are leather covered, while the third-row seats have a synthetic covering for durability, as they'll likely be folded up and down regularly. An optional $3500 enhancement pack adds a colour head-up display, moon roof and smart key card, which are standard inclusions on the higher grade Sports Luxury.

Additional features on the Sports Luxury include adaptive variable suspension, 14-way power adjustment for the front seats, a 15-speaker Mark Levinson sound system, a huge 12.3-inch display screen and a panoramic view monitor.

The side curtain airbags have been extended on both RX-L model grades to protect third-row seat occupants and the climate control is a tri-zone system to provide ventilation for all three rows.

WHAT'S THE INTERIOR LIKE?

If you're seated in the front of the Lexus RX-L you won't notice any discernible difference between it and the five-door RX, which means you'll be well catered for with plenty of space, comfortable seats and lots of adjustability. And, as you'd expect of a Lexus, the interior trim, fittings and design are of a very high standard.

The colour screen sits atop the dash, and below it sits an analogue clock, vents and controls for the sound system and climate control. The centre console houses the gear lever, park brake switch, controls for seat heating and the audio display screen functions, switches for Eco, Normal and Sport modes, VSC off switch and centre diff lock. Some of this switchgear seems oddly placed but over time owners will no doubt become familiar with the location of the controls.

The instrument binnacle houses a colour screen that provides a wealth of information, accessed by scrolling through a menu using steering wheel buttons.

Storage spaces up the front of the RX-L include a decent-size bin under the armrest with 12V outlet and USB and auxiliary ports, a smallish glovebox but generous, expandable door pockets.

Move to the second-row seats and you soon notice the compromises that have been

The RX 350L makes a claimed 216kW of power and 358Nm of torque, which is down slightly on the RX 350 due to a different exhaust system made to transform this once five-seat wagon into a seven-seater. The wheelbase of the RX-L is no longer than that of the five-seat RX, so to provide adequate foot room for third-row passengers the second-row seat base has been raised slightly. The second-row seat runners also offer 45mm more travel than the five-seat wagon, and while there's plenty of second-row space when the seats are back as far as they'll go, when moved forward to allow enough space for third-row occupants there's not a lot of leg room left for those in the middle row. Outer seat passengers will be impressed by the shape and support provided by their seats, but if you draw the short straw you won't want to spend too long in the centre position, which is anything but comfortable. If there are only two people in the second row, the centre armrest can be folded down to reveal a pair of cup holders, a storage bin and two USB power outlets. There are three child-seat anchors in the second row, and air vents, but no HVAC controls.

Now to the third row... if you can get in there, that is. Lexus reckons the third-row is suitable for occupants up to 160cm tall, with 47mm of headroom, so essentially that means tweens to early teens. While there's one old-school tether-style child seat anchorage point in the third row, no one really puts littlies that far back where they can't be tended to, and if your kids are into their later teens, chances are there won't be enough room back there for them. So eight to 14 year olds will probably be happy in the third row, especially as they score their own air conditioning vents and controls, as well as a couple of cup holders. But even with the second-row seat pushed forwards, there's not a lot of foot room in the back.

The manually operated second-row seats slide and fold forward using either a lever at the seat base or on top of the backrest

(one on each side), while the third row seats are power operated via switches near the passenger-side rear door or in the cargo area. Getting in and out of the third row requires a certain amount of agility, and is best described as awkward.

Thanks to the RX-L's extended body and redesigned tailgate, there's a decent amount of luggage space in the cargo area, even when the third-row seats are in use. In fact, Lexus claims a class-leading 566mm cargo length in this configuration, which is enough space to fit a collapsed stroller. Fold the second- and third-row seats out of the way and there's a handy, flat cargo floor, accessed via a powered tailgate and with a low load height. There are a couple of lights in the cargo area and four luggage tie-down points (two on the sides of the cargo area and two in the third-row backrests). There's also a cargo blind that stows neatly under the floor when not in use.

A slightly longer body and revised tailgate design distinguish the RX-L from its five-seat RX sibling

The Luxury variants also wear 20-inch rims, but they have a slightly different design to those on the Sports Luxury

WHAT'S IT LIKE ON THE ROAD?

Our time behind the wheel was somewhat limited on the recent RX-L launch program, but we did get to sample the RX-L on both crook back roads in the Byron Bay Hinterland as well as smooth freeway sections on the drive up to the Gold Coast.

No matter whether driving the RX 350L or the RX450hL, there's more than enough performance on tap for a seven-seat luxury SUV. Lexus claims a 0-100km/h time of eight seconds for both drivelines, and a top speed of 200km/h. The eight-speed auto in the RX 350L offers almost imperceptibly smooth gear changes while the CVT in the RX 450hL is equally refined.

The RX 350L runs a Dynamic Torque Control AWD system that automatically apportions torque between front and rear axles; it's predominantly front-wheel drive when cruising but switches to all-wheel drive when needed. The system in the RX 450hL is very different, and features the Lexus E-four intelligent on-demand all-wheel drive system that has a 50kW/139Nm electric motor on the rear axle. It's virtually impossible to detect the variation in torque split between front and rear axles without glancing at the real-time information shown on the RX-L's display screen.

Despite slightly different wheel designs, all RX-L models ride on 235/55R20 Dunlop SP Sportmax tyres. Ride quality on bumpy roads would no doubt be better with smaller diameter rims, and even the Sports Luxury model feels harsh over bumps and potholes, despite being equipped with Adaptive Variable Suspension, which automatically reduces damping force on rough roads to improve ride comfort. Body roll is well controlled when cornering at a reasonable touring pace, but the electrically assisted power steering feels a little light and vague as speeds increase.

Cruising along at freeway speeds highlights the RX-L's impressive NVH suppression. Engine and wind noise are barely audible and other than a muffled drumming over expansion joints there's not much in the way of road noise. It would be easy to cover long distances in comfort in either the RX 350L or the RX 450hL.

WHAT SAFETY FEATURES DOES IT GET?

Coinciding with the launch of the RX-L, all Lexus RX models have scored a safety upgrade to the Lexus Safety System+ (LSS+), with the pre-collision system (PCS) standard across the range and now able to detect pedestrians as well as vehicles on the road ahead. Other technologies that make up LSS+ include lane keeping assist, all-speed radar active cruise control and automatic high beam.

All RX models are fitted with 10 airbags; the side curtain airbags in RX-L variants have been extended to protect third-row seat occupants. All models have a reversing camera with back guide monitor, blind-spot monitor and rear cross-traffic alert.

Additional safety features include ABS, traction control, stability control, EBD, BA, hill-start assist and tyre pressure warning.

SO, WHAT DO WE THINK OF THE 2018 LEXUS RX-L?

The Lexus RX-L provides more versatility than the RX, but does adding a little length here and a little height there successfully transform a five-seat wagon into a seven-seater? Well, kind of. You can fit seven people in an RX-L, but not as comfortably as many of its competitors.

MUD

How to drive in mud and mud ruts without getting stuck...

WORDS Dean Mellor | PHOTOS Land Rover

Jumping in muddy puddles can be a lot of fun – just ask Peppa Pig – but driving through muddy puddles can be fraught with danger. Here's how to do it without getting your hands dirty... much.

AVOID IT IF YOU CAN

Don't drive in mud unless it's absolutely necessary. Sure, it might look like a bit of fun but it will likely cause track damage, potentially cause vehicle damage and, worst-case scenario, you could get stuck.

So, if there's another way around, avoid dunking your shiny four-wheel drive into that enticing muddy puddle.

Of course, sometimes there is no other way, so you'll simply have to take the plunge. If this is the case, make sure you and your vehicle are prepared for what lays ahead.

A few years ago I travelled to the UK to learn some mud-driving techniques from the Land Rover Experience team; after all, if anyone knows how to drive in mud it's got to be those who reside in Old Blighty. Here are a few of the things I learnt... along with some stuff I've picked up driving in mud in Australia.

Wheel spin will help clear the tyres of mud

A pair of recovery tracks like these Treds can prove invaluable when taking on mud

Check depth before driving in to deep mud

INSPECTING THE MUD

The thing about mud is it's generally murky, brown and sometimes stinky, and you can't see through it, so you'll have no way of knowing exactly how deep it is unless you get out of your vehicle and poke a stick at it or, if you're game, walk through it.

Look at the tracks left behind by previous vehicles. If the ruts don't look too deep they are probably the best option when planning your route. If the ruts are so deep you're going to run out of ground clearance, you'll have to straddle them, trying not to slide into them.

When poking at the mud or walking through it, keep a look out for any obstacles such as submerged rocks and logs, or anything that could snag on your vehicle and cause damage.

If you're caught out in the desert and you have to cross a sodden saltpan, you might be tempted to try and drive across the unbroken surface, but the top layer will be thin and your tyres will soon break through it and drop into the silty mud beneath. You're better off following tracks that have been made by previous vehicles, as the surface at the bottom of these ruts will have already been compacted, giving you the best opportunity to make your way across.

PREPARATION

Before you proceed, make sure you have a plan in case you get stuck. If you're travelling with other vehicles have your snatch strap ready to go. If you're on your own make sure your shovel and recovery tracks are easy to access and that you have something to winch off if necessary.

Lowering your tyre pressures will give your tyres a better chance of gaining purchase in mud if it has a soft base. You won't want to drop them as low as you would when driving in sand, because mud can work its way between the tyres and the wheels, which can result in rapid deflation. Nevertheless, lower tyre pressures (around 22-28psi) will provide a longer footprint, which will give you a better chance of making it through. If the mud has a solid base, however, you can maintain higher pressures.

DRIVING THROUGH MUD

Once you're ready to proceed make sure you select the appropriate gear that will give you enough momentum to drive through the mud but not so much that you'll damage your vehicle. Low range second or third gear will often be ideal.

If your vehicle is equipped with a rear diff lock, engage it prior to entering the mud. A front diff lock can also be helpful, but bear in mind its use will make it harder to steer the vehicle.

Don't forget to engage four-wheel drive in part-time 4x4s and lock free-wheeling hubs on vehicles that have them fitted, and make sure the centre diff is locked in full-time 4x4s. If your vehicle has a terrain management system, select the most appropriate mode, such as 'mud and ruts', as this will tailor the vehicle systems to best cope with the conditions, such as sharpening up throttle response and making the automatic transmission more responsive.

Once in the mud, try to keep revs up and avoid gear changes in manual-transmission vehicles; as soon as you disengage the clutch your vehicle will be sucked down into the mud and you'll become stuck.

If you feel your wheels start to spin in the mud, that's okay; in fact the rotational forces will help to clear the tread blocks giving the tyres a better chance of gaining purchase. If you begin to lose momentum but the wheels are still spinning, start see-sawing the steering wheel back and forth, which will give the front tyres a chance to bite into the sides of the ruts, hopefully helping to drag your vehicle through the mud.

STUCK IN MUD

If you get stuck in the mud, try to reverse out of your predicament. Chances are you're stuck because mud has built up in front of your tyres, so if you can back up a few metres you can then have another go at driving forwards, this time with a little more momentum.

If you get to the point where you can no longer move in either direction, it's probably because too much mud has built up under your vehicle. At this point, you'll need to forget about keeping your clothes clean and start clearing under your vehicle with a shovel; clear the mud away from the bash plate, from under the diffs, under the sidesteps and anywhere else you can see it contacting with the underside of the vehicle. If there's a lot of mud built up in front of the tyres, shovel it away.

Once you've cleared away the mud, try to gradually build up momentum; don't try to accelerate too hard or your wheels will just spin and you'll sink further into the quagmire. If you can't drive out of the mud, your next action will depend on whether you're travelling alone or with other vehicles.

If you're on your own and you have a set of recovery tracks now is the time to use them. If trying to continue forwards, wedge the tracks in front of the front tyres or, if reversing, wedge them behind the rear tyres. Engage low-range first (or reverse) and try to drive on to the recovery tracks without spinning the wheels. Once you've got some momentum, gradually build on it until you've driven on to firmer ground. This may take several attempts with recovery tracks and while it can be hard work it's sometimes the only option.

If there are other vehicles in the convoy,

Turning the steering wheel from side to side (see-sawing) can help the tyres gain traction on the sides of the ruts

You'll need plenty of momentum to climb out of a muddy hole like this

Tyres like these Mickey-Thompson Baja MTZs have wide open tread blocks to easily eject mud and side biters for extra grip

Mud can wreak havoc with wheel bearings and put wheels out of balance

If the ruts are too deep you can always fill them in with a shovel they're within reach of the stranded vehicle and they're not stuck too, one of the fastest ways to extract a 4x4 from the mud is by using a snatch strap or tow strap. Make sure you follow proper usage and safety procedures at all times.

If you don't have any luck with the above methods, you'll have to winch yourself out of the mud. You'll need a solid anchor point such as tree, another vehicle or a ground anchor. If you're well and truly stuck, clear away as much mud as possible around and under the vehicle before you begin winching, and consider a double line pull to give the winch the best chance at extracting your vehicle. Again, always follow correct procedures and safety protocols when using recovery equipment such as a winch.

MUD DAMAGE

While a mud bath might be good for your skin, it isn't any good for your vehicle. As mentioned, mud can work its way between tyres and rims, which can result in tyre deflation. It can also build up on your vehicle's wheels and put them out of balance.

Mud can also work its way past oil seals and the like, and its abrasive nature can wreak havoc on components such as wheel bearings, CV joints and clutches.

While you might wear the mud on your vehicle like a badge of honour after a long trip away, you should clean it off as soon as possible. Again, the fine grit in mud can be abrasive and it can damage your vehicle's painted surfaces.

Mud is no good for the interior of your vehicle, especially the stinky, stagnant mud you'll often find along tracks in the scrub. If you drive in mud chances are you're going to get muddy yourself, so make sure you've fitted quality water-resistant seat covers and decent rubber floor mats. And have spot set aside to stow wet and muddy recovery gear, such as a bag on the outside of your vehicle or a sealed space case.

As well as cleaning your vehicle as soon as you get the chance, make sure you clean your recovery gear. Soak snatch straps, tow ropes and winch recovery straps in water then give them a hose to get all of that abrasive muddy silt out of them.

SETTING UP YOUR VEHICLE

There are a few vehicle modifications that will help the cause if mud driving is on the agenda.

The more ground clearance you have the further you will be able to drive through mud before your vehicle bottoms out. In most states a 75mm height increase is permissible by way of a 50mm suspension lift and a 25mm increase from fitting larger tyres.

Mud-terrain tyres have open tread blocks and side-biters so they can more easily clear away mud and gain purchase in the sloppy stuff. On the downside they are noisier on the road and tread life is compromised compared to all-terrain or highway-terrain tyres.

Locking differentials will give your vehicle the best chance of maintaining traction on muddy tracks, particularly if there are undulations where lots of wheel travel will be used.

If you're driving in deep mud, you'll need a snorkel and extensions for diff and transmission breathers.

Make sure your vehicle is equipped with rated recovery points and that they're easy to access, and a decent-size rated shackle will fit through them.

Finally, fit water-resistant seat covers and decent rubber floor mats.

WHAT ARE WE TESTING AND WHY?

While Ford and Isuzu have taken a similar path by developing the Everest and MU-X 4x4 wagons on their respective utility platforms (Ranger and D-MAX), they have taken very different approaches when it comes to marketing said vehicles. Ford has aimed high, pitching its well-equipped Everest at the larger Toyota Prado in terms of equipment and price, while Isuzu has aimed its more basic albeit still very good MU-X at a lower price point.

Both 4x4 Everest and MU-X wagons are available in three trim levels. For Ford that means the auto-only Everest 4x4 comes in Ambiente ($52,990), Trend ($58,990) and Titanium ($74,701) grades. The MU-X 4x4 comes in LS-M ($48,000), LS-U ($50,300) and auto-only LS-T ($56,100) variants. If you want an auto on MU-X LS-M and LS-U grades it adds $2100 to the price. For this head-to-head battle we're comparing the mid-spec Everest Trend with the MU-X LS-U auto, the Isuzu undercutting the Ford by $6590.

Under the bonnet of the Everest you'll find a 3.2-litre five-cylinder turbo-diesel engine that's mated to a six-speed auto transmission. The MU-X has a 3.0-litre four-cylinder turbo-diesel engine also mated to a six-speed auto. Everest and MU-X run the two largest-capacity engines in the class (Trailblazer and Fortuner run 2.8L four-cylinder engines and Pajero Sport a 2.4L four-cylinder). Both vehicles offer seating for seven, tough separate body-on-chassis construction, independent front suspension with coilover struts, live-axle rear-ends with coil springs and two-speed transfer cases. While the MU-X makes do with a part-time 4x4 system, the Everest has a more sophisticated full-time 4x4 system.

The Everest Trend is equipped with 18-inch alloy wheels, a 10-speaker audio system with steering wheel controls, an 8-inch colour touchscreen, dual 4.2-inch colour instrument screens, Apple CarPlay/Android Auto, satnav, automatic high beam, a power tailgate, second- and third-row privacy glass, 230V inverter, four 12V power outlets, two USB ports, dual-zone climate control air conditioning, keyless entry, rain-sensing wipers and auto high-beam.

In LS-U spec the MU-X is equipped with 18-inch alloy wheels, audio system with steering wheel controls and iPod input, an 8-inch colour touchscreen, Multi-Information Display, satnav, second- and third-row privacy glass, two 12V power outlets, two USB ports, climate control air conditioning and keyless entry/start.

The MU-X interior is quite basic

WHAT'S THE INTERIOR LIKE IN THE EVEREST AND MU-X?

The Everest interior offers a contemporary design and well-positioned instruments and controls. The eight-inch touchscreen is located up nice and high where it's easy to see and operate, and the instrument binnacle offers all the information you'll ever need... and then some. There are big rotary dials for sound system volume and radio tune, as well as steering wheel controls. The power/USB outlets are well situated on the centre console and the controls for the Terrain Management System (TMS), high/low ratios and rear diff lock are clearly marked and easy to use.

The MU-X interior has a less luxurious air than the Everest. The colour touchscreen is well positioned but the air conditioning controls are in a strange, circular layout, while the MU-X's basic part-time 4x4 system (called Terrain Command) is operated by a big dial on the centre console with three positions: 2H, 4H and 4L.

It's not hard to find a comfortable driving position in either vehicle as they both offer plenty of scope for adjustment. Second-row seat occupants will also be pleased with the amount of width on offer in both vehicles, although those in the MU-X don't have access to 12V power.

Both vehicles have air conditioning vents in all three rows. The MU-X has the edge in regards to space and comfort for third-row occupants, but it's a close call. On the flipside, the Everest offers more cargo space. With second- and third-row seats folded, both vehicles offer long and flat cargo floors, but the MU-X's is slightly raised, making loading and unloading a little less convenient.

WHAT ARE THE EVEREST AND MU-X LIKE TO DRIVE?

The Everest is the more refined of the two vehicles on the open road. Its five-cylinder engine is smooth and the Everest features an active noise cancelling system that results in a quiet cabin at highway speeds. Despite its commercial vehicle underpinnings, the Everest also provides good ride quality and responsive handling.

With 147kW or power and a healthy 470Nm torque peak, the Everest's 3.2-litre five-cylinder engine delivers effortless performance, and it works well with the smooth shifting six-speed automatic transmission.

Isuzu went to some effort in 2017 to improve the MU-X's refinement, but it's still not a match for the Everest. The 3.0-litre four-cylinder turbo-diesel engine is not the smoothest powerplant and it can sound a

On road the Everest feels refined and powerful

The Everest interior is well appointed and comfortable

A clearly marked dial allows the Everest driver to select the appropriate Terrain Management System (TMS) setting to suit conditions little raucous when revved hard.

The more powerful Everest has an on-road edge but the MU-X still delivers more than adequate on-road performance, and it has a strong midrange, which means it doesn't need to be revved hard to deliver its best, negating some of its gruffness; the 430Nm torque peak is developed low in the rev range (from 2000-2200rpm). The MU-X's six-speed auto shifts through its ratios smoothly and predictably.

The MU-X provides a comfortable and compliant ride over rough surfaces thanks to soft spring and damping rates, but it also exhibits more body roll than the Everest when cornering, and doesn't feel quite as lively.

WHAT ARE THE EVEREST AND MU-X LIKE OFF ROAD?

The Ford Everest is a capable off-road vehicle; it offers decent ground clearance, short front and rear overhangs, plenty of rear wheel travel, good low-range reduction, an effective traction control system and a locking rear diff. The Everest also features a sophisticated Terrain Management System with selectable drive modes that tailor vehicle response to suit different terrains: Snow/Grass/Gravel, Sand and Rock modes.

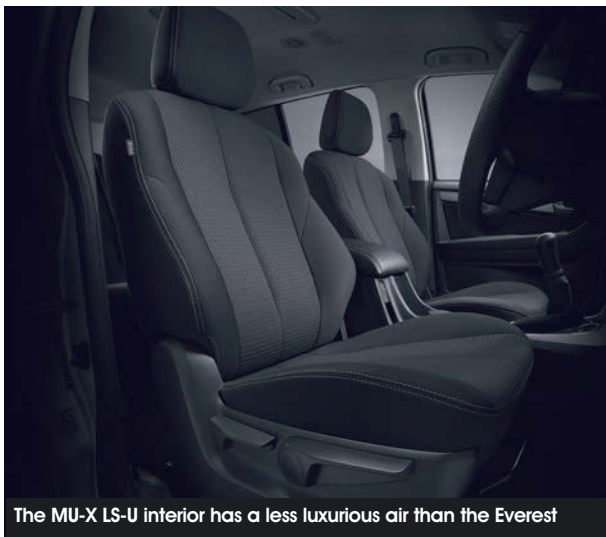

The Everest uses its traction control system and locking rear diff to good effect on steep, rocky climbs or undulating tracks that test a vehicle's suspension travel. Even when the rear diff lock is engaged, the TC still operates on the front axle, so the Everest is able to climb up and over obstacles that can trip up some other vehicles. And its in these conditions that the MU-X can struggle; when it runs out of wheel travel on undulating terrain its less sophisticated traction control system struggles to prevent wheel spin. And without a rear diff lock the MU-X simply can't match the Everest in such conditions.

In most other off-road conditions, however, the MU-X performs well enough. It offers plenty of ground clearance, good approach and departure angles, effective low-range gearing, plenty of useable torque and, like Everest, it has an off-road friendly tyre size.

The MU-X's 3000kg maximum braked trailer rating is equal to the Everest's

The MU-X LS-U interior has a less luxurious air than the Everest

The MU-X has a well-positioned colour touchscreen with satnav

WHAT SAFETY FEATURES DO THE EVEREST AND MU-X GET?

Both the Everest and the MU-X have been awarded a five-star ANCAP rating.

The Ford Everest Trend is equipped with safety features including reversing camera, rear parking sensors, Dynamic Stability Control, Traction Control, Rollover Mitigation and Trailer Sway Control, a full complement of airbags and Driver Assist Technology (adaptive cruise control, forward collision alert and lane keeping system). If you want Active Park Assist, Cross Traffic Alert and a tyre pressure monitor, you'll have to fork out $74,704 for the top-spec Everest Titanium.

The Isuzu MU-X LS-U is equipped with ABS with EBD, traction and stability control, EBA, hill descent control, reversing camera, rear parking sensors, six airbags, LED headlights with auto levelling and fog lights.

So, Which One Wins And Why?

There's no doubting the Ford Everest Trend is a better overall package than the Isuzu MU-X LS-U auto, but $6590 better? Well, yes. The Everest is bigger, more powerful, more refined and it has a far more sophisticated and effective 4x4 system.

If your budget doesn't stretch to the Everest Trend you could always opt for the more affordable $52,990 Everest Ambiente, which is only $590 more than the MU-X

LS-U. You'll miss out on some Trend features such as Driver Assist Technology (adaptive cruise control, forward collision alert and lane keeping system), satnav, automatic high beam and power tailgate, but even in lower-grade Ambiente spec the Everest still trumps the MU-X LS-U with its Terrain Management System and locking rear diff.

Examined in isolation, the Isuzu MU-X LS-U auto is a great package – it's spacious, offers strong on-road performance, good off-road capability and a class-equalling 3000kg towing capacity – but it doesn't stack up when compared directly with the Ford Everest Trend.

APPEARANCE VS REALITY

The Colorado Z71 is Holden's hero dual-cab 4x4 ute, with plenty of black decals, black 18-inch wheels and unique sports bar and tonneau cover to make it stand out from the crowd.

WORDS Dean Mellor

The Z71 works well on formed off-road tracks but be careful of those plastic side steps – they hang quite low

The Z71 sits at the top of the Colorado range and adds a host of styling features over the LTZ model to make it stand out from lesser, run-of-the-mill dual-cab utes. As well as the black-out bonnet, the Z71 scores roof rails, Arsenal Grey 18-inch wheels, black door handles, tailgate handle and mirrors, unique front bumper and sports bar, and, of course, Z71 decals.

WHAT IS THE 2018 HOLDEN COLORADO Z71?

Mechanically identical to any other Holden Colorado 4x4 dual-cab ute, the Z71 adds visual flare courtesy a bunch of styling additions, and equipment level is on a par with the high-spec Colorado LTZ, with a few minor additions. As such, it sits at the top of the Colorado price list and in dual-cab guise it costs $54,990; the auto as fitted to this test vehicle adds $2200 to bring the price to $57,190.

The Colorado is powered by a 2.8-litre DOHC four-cylinder turbo-diesel engine (called Duramax). It makes an impressive 147kW at 3600rpm and 500Nm of torque at 2000rpm when mated to the six-speed auto. Colorado has a two-speed transfer case and part-time, shift-on-the-fly 4x4 system.

Chassis and suspension is standard for the class with separate body on chassis construction, independent double wishbone coil spring front suspension and a live-axle rear with leaf springs.

Standard equipment across the Colorado range includes Holden MyLink infotainment system with Apple CarPlay/Android Auto, seven-inch colour touchscreen and DAB+ radio. The LT model adds 17-inch alloy wheels, side steps, front fog lights and carpet.

There's a more substantial step up to the LTZ, which scores a larger eight-inch colour touchscreen, satnav, voice recognition, seven-speaker premium audio, 18-inch alloys, power folding and heated exterior mirrors, rain sensing wipers, LED tail lights, soft tonneau cover, alloy sports bar, climate control and six-way powered driver's seat.

The Colorado Z71 loses the LTZ's heated exterior mirrors but gains 18-inch Arsenal Grey alloy wheels, black leather seat trim, heated front seats with embroidered Z71 headrests, Sailplane sports bar with side rails, unique soft tonneau cover and roof rails, along with black bits replacing a lot of the LTZ's chrome bits.

WHAT'S THE INTERIOR LIKE?

The interior of the Colorado Z71 provides a blend of basic functionality with a touch of sportiness. Despite the leather seats with

The Colorado Z71 interior has a mix of soft-touch materials and hard plastics

The 2.8-litre Duramax turbo-diesel engine makes dollops of low-rpm torque

Simple part-time 4x4 system is activated by a clearly marked dial on the centre console embroidered 'Z71 4x4' logos, there's no hiding this ute's commercial-vehicle origins; the trim is predominantly grey, with a mix of hard and soft plastics and some silver highlights around the centre vents, on the steering wheel and down on the centre console. And the hard plastics are prone to marking such as on the glovebox lid, the centre console and the door trims.

The overall interior design is pleasing enough, with big switches and controls, and the bright 8-inch colour touchscreen, but there are a couple obvious blanked-out switches that lower the tone a little.

There's plenty of space up front with loads of fore/aft adjustment, but the steering is adjustable for rake only, so the driving position won't suit everyone, particularly taller drivers. The heated front seats are quite flat in the base; they're not uncomfortable but could do with a bit more shape and bolstering for better support. There are auxiliary and USB ports in the small bin beneath the centre armrest, a couple of cup holders in the centre console, a cup holder in each door and a 12V power outlet on the dash.

The Colorado offers decent legroom for rear seat occupants but width could become an issue if you try to squeeze three adults across the back. When the centre position is unoccupied there's a fold-down armrest, and those in the outer rear seats score door-pocket cup holders, pockets in the back of the front seats and a 12V power outlet, but no rear air vents.

The Z71's generous tray is accessed via an awkward-to-use soft tonneau cover that's rolled up and tied back with straps when not in use. The Sailplane sports bar's side rails continue down each side of the tray, which might look neat but doesn't help the load-carrying cause. It also hinders rearward visibility from the driver's seat; I often found myself looking twice over my shoulder when lane changing, as the sports bar would catch my eye and make me think there was another vehicle beside me. There are four cargo tie-down hooks in the tray but none are located on the floor where they would be of most use.

WHAT'S IT LIKE ON THE ROAD?

The Colorado offers good on-road ride quality for a ute, even when unladen. Sure, it's a little firm in the rear, but it's reasonably compliant considering its one-tonne payload capacity. Even on crook roads it does a good job of soaking up bumps and potholes, and always manages to maintain its composure. The electrically assisted power steering offers a nice feel and well-weighted assistance and, for a high-riding 4x4 ute, body roll is well controlled.

Sailplane sports bar and side rails look trick but hinder rearward visibility and reduce practicality

There are four cargo tie-down hooks but they're not located on the floor where they'd be of most use

The soft tonneau cover has an awkward roll-up design

The Colorado's 2.8-litre four-cylinder turbo-diesel engine is a ripper. With loads of torque from low in the rev range, it's perfectly suited to a vehicle that will occasionally haul heavy loads, as well as likely see some towing action (maximum braked towing capacity is 3500kg). Overall gearing is tall (1600rpm at 100km/h in top gear) and the engine handles it well; the Colorado will happily lope along up hill and down dale in top gear with as little as 1700rpm showing on the tach.

Of course, if you want the engine to rev, it will. Put your boot into it and it'll go to 4000rpm before the six-speed auto grabs another gear. If you want to examine the area between 4000rpm and the 4500rpm redline, you'll have to shift the transmission across to the manual mode and hold it in gear.

While the six-speed auto isn't the smoothest shifting transmission around, it does have a nice trait when off-throttle, enthusiastically downshifting on descents to help maintain a set speed. It's particularly good when the cruise control is on and you don't want speed to get away from you on long downhill sections of highway.

The Colorado offers good road noise isolation, wind noise suppression and a quiet engine, making the cabin a pleasant space when driving at highway speeds on the open road.

Average fuel consumption on test was 10.5L/100km, which results in a touring range in excess of 650km from the 76-litre fuel tank.

WHAT'S IT LIKE OFF THE ROAD?

Off-road? The Colorado is not bad... but not great. Good low-rpm torque combines with a low-ish 36.8:1 overall first-gear ratio to deliver good climbing capability in steep country, but as track conditions deteriorate

On test the Colorado Z71 averaged 10.5L/100km

The 18-inch Arsenal Grey alloy wheels are shod with 265/60R18 Bridgestone Dueler H/T tyres

the Colorado is limited by a lack of ground clearance. The front-end bottoms out when the suspension is compressed, and ramp-over angle is compromised by the low-slung plastic side steps. Like most utes (they all have long rear overhangs), departure angle isn't great, so care has to be taken when driving over drainage channels or when exiting gullies.

The Colorado offers class-competitive wheel travel, but once it's been exceeded on particularly rough tracks the electronic traction control is called into action. Unfortunately, it's not as effective as the TC on some other 4x4 utes and, without a rear diff lock, as fitted to many of its peers, the Colorado can struggle on gnarly climbs unless its driver carefully chooses a line that avoids big washouts.

On steep descents, engine braking has to be supplemented with judicious use of the brake pedal to maintain a safe speed. Sure, the Colorado has Hill Descent Control, but the target speed is too fast for very steep hills.

The Colorado really needs a rear diff lock to match it with its competitors off road; fortunately there are aftermarket options.

If you get stuck the Colorado Z71 has a couple of tow hooks at the front, but none at the rear, so fitting a towbar would be a good option for those who intend to spend a bit of time off the road.

WHAT SAFETY FEATURES DOES IT GET?

The Colorado Z71 is packed with safety features and has been awarded a five-star ANCAP rating.

The Z71 features seven airbags, forward collision alert, lane departure warning, tyre pressure monitoring system, front and rear park assist, reversing camera, ABS, EBD, roll-over mitigation, traction control, hill start assist, trailer sway control, hill descent control, three rear child seat anchor points and an ISOFIX child seat anchor point. It also scores an alarm, engine immobiliser, remote keyless entry, LED daytime running lights and front fog lights.

SO, WHAT DO WE THINK OF THE 2018 HOLDEN COLORADO Z71?

For those after a hero 4x4 ute, the Holden Colorado Z71 has certainly got the look, and since its late-2016 update, which introduced a host of chassis and suspension changes, as well as exterior and interior styling tweaks, it now offers the on-road style and performance to match it with the best in class. It's lacking a little in off-road performance, but that's nothing that can't be remedied by the 4x4 aftermarket.

- Resomat Premium, when used in automotive applications improves in-car acoustics, reducing noise levels, enhancing audio and the quality of the ride.
- Resomat Premium is a foil faced, highly flexible, constrained layer damping material with a pressure sensitive self adhesive for easy application. Simply peel off the back layer and apply. Due to the products natural flexibility, it will conform to uneven surfaces without the use of a heat gun.
- Resomat Premium is made from new generation polymers that maintain their ability throughout their application life. These new generation polymers do not give off odour, harden, or go brittle overcoming problems of older style damping materials.
- The flexibility of the material combined with its adhesive film makes Resomat Premium easy and simple to apply without specialist tools or techniques.
- Resomat Premium is designed to reduce the vibration and sound transmission of light gauge metals and plastic structures. In doing so, Resomat Premium reduces the tinny, ringing noise created in such structures.

2007 MITSUBISHI TRITON ML Ultimate touring rig, 3.5L V6 with 122,161kms (last serviced 2000kms ago). Honest reason for selling, it has sat in the driveway more than it has been off road. It was built with the purpose of taking it out every weekend but plans have changed with work and it hasn't been used for its purpose. I would much rather it go to a home which will get and out use it like it should be. With well over $40,000 worth of custom work and accessories done please only genuine enquires. I have a new work car which i was going to transfer the tray & canopies onto, so I won't sell it if i can't get a reasonable offer. REGO: WPG96 (JFM4039110) 0422 233 694 QLD $28,800

If your Land Rover Defender doesn't have enough wheels - or seats - the Chelsea Truck Company can help. This '6x6 Civilian Carrier' takes a Defender 110 and stretches the body by 880mm, adding a second driven rear axle, while the seats - all nine of them - are trimmed in quality leather and fabric as part of a high-spec fitout. The price for all this extravagance? More than AU$450,000.

Chelsea Truck Company opened an Australian branch (in Sydney) late last year. Find out more at: chelseatruckcompany.com.au

4x4 DIRECTORY

Find your next 4x4 or SUV with our detailed guide to what's available in Australian new car dealerships.

DATA & RESEARCH Juliette Remfrey

We've listed in this section every offroader in the new vehicle market in Australia - this includes softroaders, plus the occasional 2WD variant.

A few things to know before you read:

- How to use - this is a guide for you to see what's in the market, rather than get highly detailed specs on every car. Have a browse here, then research in more detail via the manufacturer websites or dealer.
- Accuracy of data - for many vehicles there are many combinations of trim, engine, specification...you name it. If we tried to list every possible combination, the guide would be too long, so we've just listed representative figures in each case, mostly split by engine type.
- Towing - remember that the figure quoted is the BRAKED tow weight for which you'll need an electric brake controller.

What the table means:

SPEC*	WHAT IT MEANS?
Make & model	Who made it and the model. Not every possible sub-model will be listed, only a range.
Model	Model or variant
Fuel	P - Petrol. D - Diesel. P-H - Petrol Hybrid. D-H - Diesel Hybrid.
Capacity kW/Nm	4/2.8/147/410 - 4 cylinder, 2.8L capacity, 147kW (power), 410Nm (torque)
4x4 system	On-demand - drives the front wheels, rear wheels come in as required. May include a lock system which brings the rear wheels in quicker. AWD - all wheel drive, drives all wheels all the time. Part-time - 2WD on road, 4WD offroad.
Transmission	A - auto, M - manual, LR - low range (yes, no, optional). A and M list number of gears, or CVT for autos. N/L if a transmission is not available.
Suspension	IFS - independent front suspension. IRS - independent rear suspension. Coil, leaf, air - types of spring. Beam - beam, or solid/live axle. A-O - air optional, H-A - height adjustable (non-air).
Weights	Kerb - "empty" weight as quoted by the manufacturer, typically includes fluids and fuel but no load or accessories. GVM - Gross Vehicle Mass, maximum the vehicle can weigh. Payload - how much it can carry, difference between GVM and payload. Tow - braked tow capacity. Weights representative.
Safety	If tested, the ANCAP safety rating. 5 stars is the maximum. Visit: howsafeisyourcar.com.au for more details. FSS - Full Sized Spare.
Economy	Consumption - the figure quoted is the official ADR81/01 figure. Tank - size in litres. Range - based on 90% of the fuel tank size and the AD81/10 figure.
Price	Representative list price, without, on-road costs (ORC). Visit the manufacturer website for a price based on your location, and the specific variant you select.

SOFTROADERS

Vehicles designed for light-duty offroading.

Formerly a model, now an entrepreneur, actress, TV presenter and designer, Megan Gale has been added to the roster of Lexus brand ambassadors.

Gale was recently given the keys to the new RX 350L seven-seater, which she described as the ideal vehicle for her and her family, which includes two young children.

"We will certainly appreciate having the choice of three rows of seating or the additional room that you need as a family."

The RX 350L in Gale's possession features the RX 350's standard V6 petrol engine, but lengthens the body, raises the roof and reprofiles the tailgate to add third-row seating for two without severely compromising luggage space.

OFFROADERS

Vehicles designed for offroad use.

Any Jeep that wears the 'Trail Rated' badge means it comes with serious off-road ability.

Such is the case with the Jeep Grand Cherokee Trailhawk.

Powered by a 3.0-litre turbo-diesel V6 matched to an 8-speed auto, the Trailhawk features Jeep's Quadra-Drive II full-time four-wheel drive system with five modes – Snow, Sand, Mud, Rock and Auto – as well as adjustable air suspension, electronic traction control and Jeep's Selec-Speed low-speed cruise control that works even on steep ascents and descents.

To ensure the running gear stays running, there's also additional skid plating under the body.
