From the editor

We live in an age where stars never leave their past behind. With a couple of clicks – or swipes – everyone can see what used to get people excited.

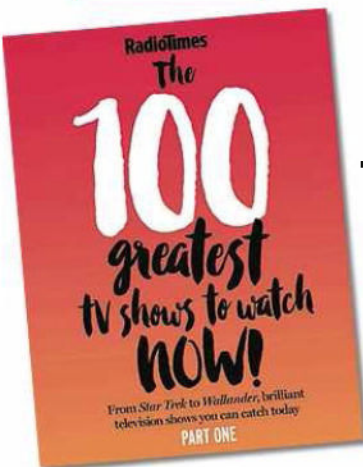

I'm sure the infinite archive that is YouTube has hastened the return of comedian Tracey Ullman to our screens. When Tracey went off to conquer America in the 1990s, her digital legacy lived on. And while she was away, the relentless march of women into positions of influence created a new range of comic targets – from Angela Merkel to Dame Judi Dench.

Don't miss Tracey's new show – or our free DVD offer this week for another evergreen talent, Sir David Attenborough!

WHAT GETS US TALKING...

CHRIS EVANS – ALL BY HIMSELF

The new-look Top Gear is due to start on BBC2 in May and a senior BBC source tells me that ginger-haired motormouth Chris Evans will be the main anchor on the show, with guest stars appearing on an ad hoc basis. So all the speculation about who will be Evans' co-presenters (and whether one of them will be a woman) appears to have been smoke and mirrors. "It's going to be very surprising," says the source, who also confirms that the Stig will be appearing. How does Evans stay bouncy – see page 153

PYTHONS ON FILM – AGAIN?

The success of Gold's Monty Python Live (Mostly) stage performance in the summer of 2014 has given the broadcaster big ideas. Chief executive Darren Childs tells me that he would love to get the Pythons together for another film if they can see their way to follow up classics like The Life of Brian and The Meaning of Life. What a coup that would be...

A WOMAN MAKING THE NEWS

Maxine Peake is to play former Sun editor and newspaper executive Rebekah Brooks in Red Top, a new Comic Strip adventure for Gold, created by Comic Strip veteran Peter Richardson. Peake will play the "innocent and beguiling northern girl who accidentally becomes chief executive of News International and gets caught up in a 70s Watergate-style scandal" in the film that airs on 20 January.

GREEN LIGHT FOR CATASTROPHE

The Channel 4 sitcom Catastrophe, written by and starring Sharon Horgan and Rob Delaney, was one of the funniest shows of 2015, and while a third series has not yet been announced, senior Channel 4 sources tell me that it's going to happen. "It's a question of getting the contracts straight," says my mole. "Sharon and Rob want to do it, we want to do it – it will happen." Also in line for new series are the BBC comedies Boy Meets Girl and Cradle to Grave. BEN DOWELL

A natural classic

In his 2009 series Life, David Attenborough introduced us to the Japanese macaque, or snow monkey. They are able to live further north than any other primate thanks to their knack of adapting to their environment – including making use of natural hot springs to bathe. It's that remarkable adaptability that led Attenborough to reference the macaque in his 2013 series Rise of Animals. Now, thanks to Radio Times, you can enjoy that two-part series again as we are giving it away FREE on DVD.

We know best

Why Brain of Britain is top of the class

IT'S HARD FOR me to admit it, but part of the reason why people like Radio 4's Brain of Britain is the pleasure of habit. For all but the real veterans among us, Brain (known backstage as "Brian", because it's the easiest mis-typing in the world to perpetrate) has always been there.

Contestants this year are aiming for the 63rd Brain of Britain title. So the programme is the oldest, and simplest, of its type. Its only eccentricity is a bonus point for five consecutive right answers – a deserved reward, given the variety of knowledge you've been called upon to display.

But what kind of knowledge is it? Well, a while ago on the show, I found myself reading out a question that seemed to sum up the quiz experience as we see it. "Which character in a Dickens novel," the question ran, "often used the saying 'When found, make a note of?'" What interested me most was not the answer (Captain Cuttle in Dombey and Son), but the idea that a certain class of information is interesting enough in itself to merit jotting down. It won't usually be useful information, vital to the task of living, but there's some element of surprise in it that makes it pleasurable to learn, and keep in the memory.

In any given edition of Brain, there'll be many questions an individual listener can't answer. But when the answers emerge, I hope most of them bring "Oh! I never knew that" as a reaction. Example from the random page of script in front of me: "Who reportedly said to Anton Chekhov: 'Shakespeare's plays are bad enough, but yours are even worse?'" Answer: Tolstoy. The trouble with BBC1's Pointless, say, which I admire as an ingenious format and often enjoy, is that it doesn't give you nuggets like that to take away.

Of course, the joy of that question is lost on anyone who has barely heard of Chekhov or Tolstoy, and knows Shakespeare only as a name to avoid. But there's not a lot we can do about that. From its earliest days (as the Ask Me Another segment of a show called What Do You Know?), Brain always did uphold what used to be called the Western Canon, the basic store of Great Stuff that our culture is built on – though we long ago extended that field to include all the world's traditions.

There's no snobbery about popular culture, either, so you will hear questions about boy bands, video games, computer lore, sporting heroes, and slogans and fashions and fads; but the winning of the title won't be based too much on those.

BBC2's Eggheads, I think, goes too far in that audience-pleasing direction, though the odd Egghead has been a contestant on Brain – indeed, the Egghead of Eggheads, Kevin Ashman, is not only a past champion, but used to be our question-setter. There aren't many holes in the generality of Kevin's knowledge. I used to think he might be a tad vulnerable on jazz – but then everybody seems to be. As a jazzier myself, I'm saddened when a contestant identifies Louis Armstrong as a saxophonist.

We do pretty well for quizzes in this country on the whole. The televised ones keep the score in vision, which can add to the suspense (or sometimes kill it). University Challenge, in particular, has tried nobly to do justice to science and mathematics, sometimes at the risk of baffling the viewer completely with opaque terminology. But Brain of Britain, I claim, makes the most dignified job of dressing up as braininess what is really an inability to forget things... Only teasing, brains.

Brain of Britain is on Radio 4, Monday at 3pm

FANTASY TV

HIGHLIGHTS OF 2016

Expect plenty of innovation in the coming months, but also familiarity, as this year's TV turns out to be not entirely unlike anything you've seen before.

WHEN HOVERBOARDS CATCH FIRE

If 2015 was the year the exploding hoverboard seized our imaginations, 2016 will be the year that amateur video sufficient to fill six programmes emerges. Some safety advice pads out the footage of hipsters in flaming trainers, and the relentless repetition is leavened by a sense that almost everyone involved deserves to be alight.

KIRSTIE'S HAND-MADE SHELTER

A departure for Location, Location, Location stalwart Kirstie Allsopp, as she attempts to spend six weeks living in a local park. In the first episode she demonstrates how to fashion seat covers from shopping bags, and hunts for wild plants to treat fox bites.

THE APPRENTICE TRIBUNAL

Former contestants have grievances heard by a real tribunal judge. Lord Sugar, who has agreed to pay any fines, is spectacularly disagreeable under questioning, while Katie Hopkins stirs the pot.

LAST DATES

A cruel twist on a successful formula: cameras record the moment when one member of a couple breaks it off in the middle of a night out. There are plenty of tears, but it's the oft-repeated phrases – "It's not you, it's me", "This isn't working" and "I can change" – that spawn an equally popular drinking game.

One of a kind

THE RT INTERVIEW BY BEN DOWELL AND STEPHEN ARMSTRONG

TRACEY ULLMAN MIGHT just be the most important woman in the history of British comedy. She was the first to be offered her own sketch show – both here and in America – the first pop star to put a politician in her music video, the first foreign female comic with a hit show on US TV and the woman who discovered The Simpsons. You'd expect her to be name-checked by every new sketch troupe or home-grown comedy hopeful. Instead, she admits with a wry grin, no one even recognises her on the Tube.

"I haven't worked here in a while," shrugs the 56-year-old comedian, sounding just like the same south-London girl who first entranced the nation in the 1980s. "So I am always anonymous, always sitting on the Tube next to people. I go to the BBC and people think I'm Julie Walters. I sign in and security goes, 'Oh, I know who you are, Miss Walters!'" Ullman laughs then slips into a perfect Julie Walters impersonation. "And I go, 'Oh, crikey, thanks very much!'"

That may be about to change. Having spent the past three decades living in Hollywood, Ullman is back on primetime British TV with Tracey Ullman's Show, a rollicking blend of impressions – from Angela Merkel to Dame Maggie Smith – and wonderfully silly character comedy, including an entirely topless female MP (the breasts are prosthetic, she points out) and a character simply known as Karen, a drug mule.

Maggie Smith and Judi Dench are there for a reason: "I think we have wonderful older actresses in this country who aren't afraid to look old – in fact, when America needs a mother they have to import one of ours because American women have done so much to their faces, they don't want to look over 60," she quips.

But what of Karen the drug mule? The on-screen conceit is that she has returned to the UK after 30 years in a jail in the Far East. Is Karen's awe at the changes she finds in today's Britain based on Ullman's own experience? In fact, Ullman explains, she's always travelled between the US and the UK to visit her daughter Mabel McKeown, a 29-year old charity worker and Labour Party activist who lives in London, and, until recently, Ullman's mum Doreen. The first scene in the show – with young Tracey dancing in her mother's bedroom – is a tribute to the woman who brought her up alone from the age of six, and who taught her to be funny. Doreen died last year, in a fire at her Buckinghamshire home.

"I didn't have the ideal start to life with my dad dying," says Ullman, referring to the early death of her father when she was six. He had a heart attack while reading her a bedtime story. "So it was a bit tough for my mum. I used to put on shows to cheer her up. That little scene in the bedroom dancing around – that was where everything started for me."

When her mum remarried an erratic and occasionally violent man, Tracey retreated further into performing, learning mimicry to avoid playground bullies as her family criss-crossed the country and she went from new school to new school. All of which stood her in good stead when, as an ex-dancer working in a paper products company, she invented a born-again Christian chanteuse called Beverly for a new character night at London's Royal Court Theatre. BBC comedy chief Paul Jackson and Lenny Henry caught her turn and persuaded her to join the cast of 1981's A Kick Up the Eighties – which introduced Rik Mayall and Robbie Coltrane and helped pave the way for the alternative comedy of Dawn French and Jennifer Saunders, the Comic Strip, The Young Ones and Blackadder.

"When they asked me to do it, I really didn't know," she recalls. "I remember saying to them, 'What do the girls do, wear bikinis and get their bums pinched by Benny Hill?' But Paul said it doesn't have to be like that. He knew that to get people like myself, or Dawn and Jennifer, he had to let us do what we wanted to do. I wasn’t a traditional-looking girl, let’s face it! I was a bit odd...” she laughs.

‘I’m anonymous... I go to the BBC and people think I’m Julie Walters’

From there, her career exploded – the BBC offered her a show, and she chose to work with Lenny Henry and David Copperfield in the groundbreaking Three of a Kind, which avoided every sexist and racist stereotype in a way that still seems cutting edge today. She also signed to Stiff Records and released a string of hit singles, including a cover version of My Guy by Madness. The song’s video starred then Labour leader Neil Kinnock, and opened the door for politicians to turn up on Have I Got News for You and One Direction in Comic Relief spots.

“Neil Kinnock is a good friend,” she explains. “And yes, I think generally I have been a Labour supporter and member for years and years.” Would she ask Jeremy Corbyn to join her on screen? She’s a little taken aback. “I don’t think a politician would do that now... and I’m not overtly political.” Although one sketch in the new series takes place in a library facing closure thanks to funding cuts, which sounds like a political point, albeit of the most genteel kind. “I do live near a library that’s going to become a private house, and it just breaks my heart, but really I just wanted to tap dance in an unlikely place.”

At the height of her pop/sketch stardom, she suddenly disappeared – heading to LA with her new husband, Birds of a Feather producer Allan McKeown, who persuaded her to try out her talents there, even though she didn’t have any promises of work. The gamble paid off. Together they produced The Tracey Ullman Show for Fox, which discovered Dan Castellaneta – who went on to be the voice of Homer Simpson – and included cartoon skits that evolved into The Simpsons themselves. In the 90s, Ullman’s show moved to HBO for some one-off specials and Tracey Takes On... an Emmy-winning topical show. In 2008, she shifted to Showtime for the deeply satirical State of the Union, taking on the politics of the Bush era.

BECAUSE HER US shows didn’t get an airing in the UK, even the smartest comedy fan under 50 has barely heard of her – but in the US, the shows made her a legend. “Tracey is absolutely beloved here,” explains Bruce Wagner, who wrote for Ullman’s State of the Union. “This was borne out daily whenever we walked in the streets. Black people were always particularly exuberant in their voiced praise. Tracey is a chameleon and her impersonations of all races, ages and walks of life are purely egalitarian. One of the eeriest things that ever happened was that we once went to dinner with executives from Showtime and Tracey started doing an imitation of me. It was so accurate that the near impossible ▷

ANGELA MERKEL

I'm fascinated by Angela Merkel, so I wanted to be Angela Merkel. I think they're like Trojan horses, these impersonations.

I can dress up like them and make them whatever I want them to be, like putting a personality within them. I didn't want to just do a straight impersonation, I wanted to try and show their lives.

I always imagine Angela Merkel is someone that has to be with men all the time, in these rooms, having meetings... And I thought, "I wonder what she's like when she's with her best friend and they just talk about hair and make-up?"

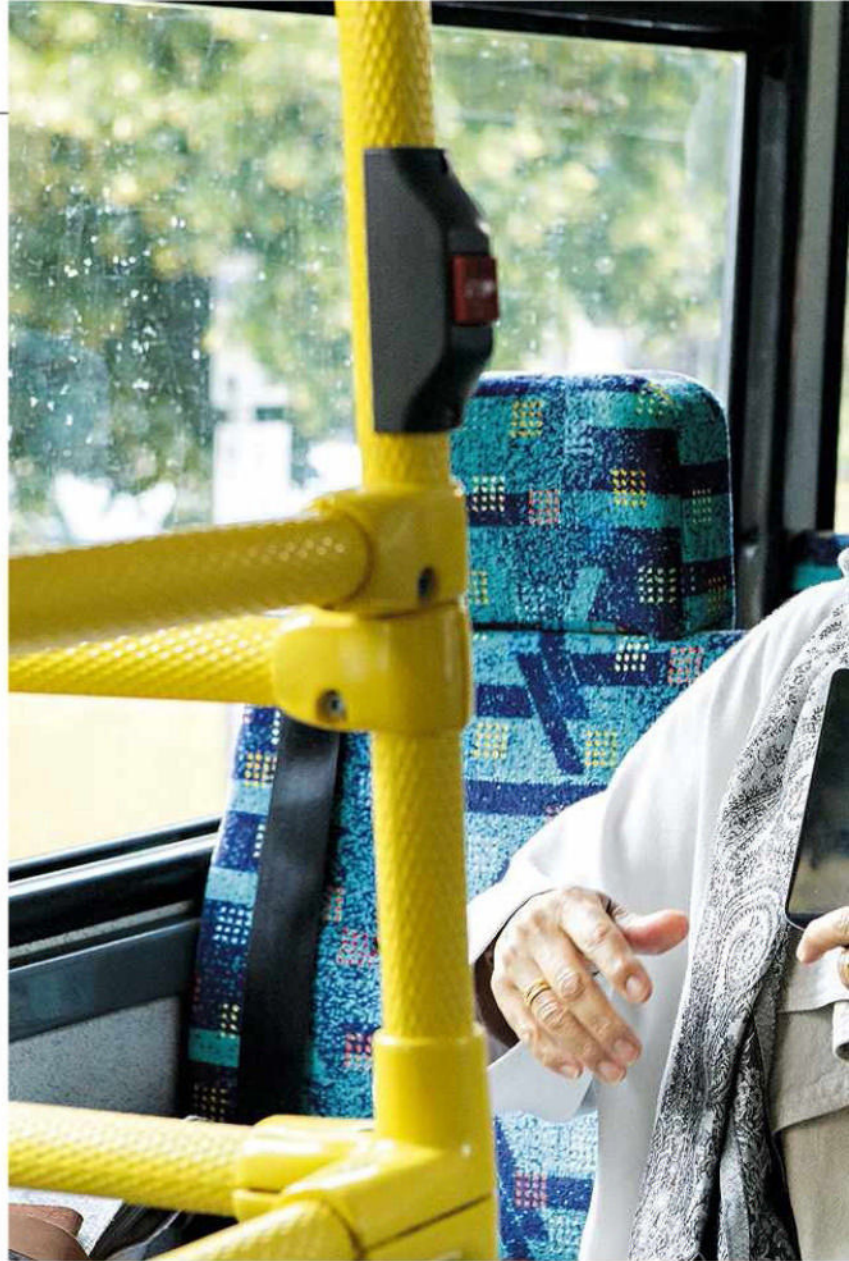

JUDI DENCH

I wanted to do a series of national treasures, which I think we have in England. We just thought that was a great component of the show: who knew Judi Dench was a kleptomaniac?! I think she'll find it funny... I hope so.

MAGGIE SMITH

I've met Maggie Smith a couple of times but I don't know them [Smith and Dench] really well. I've just seen so much of their brilliant work, and I am so proud of them, you know, they're extraordinary, and I hope they take it in the right spirit!

I think it's really interesting to know that Maggie Smith was Kenneth Williams's flatmate years ago. And you listen to her voice and there is a slight Kenneth Williams in there! So maybe it rubbed off on her all those years ago. I mean, if you share a flat with Kenneth Williams, you're going to pick something up, surely! So that's in there. I hope that they don't hate me for this...

◁ happened: I saw myself as others do. It was unsettling, to say the least."

Perhaps the most famous member of Ullman's US fan base is one Meryl Streep. "Tracey Ullman shot like a sparkler into my vision on the set of [1985 film] Plenty," says Streep of her former co-star, now her friend.

"I thought I'd found my soulmate: a restless, silly, musical wild mimic, with a dark underlay of sangfroid. I loved her on sight. I was absolutely blackout-shocked to discover she was barely 23 years old (I was 33) and I still feel like her (slightly cowed and aspirant) little sister. She hasn't changed in spirit or matter in all these years that we have remained close. I have no objectivity, clearly, but I am not alone in this assessment of her!"

After 30 years of marriage, Ullman's husband Allan died in 2013, aged 67, from prostate cancer. His death spurred her return to the screen – and the UK. "He'd be thrilled that I've finally done it all and got a team together," she says. And no doubt he would be thrilled to discover, as she was, that the old bow-tie-wearing BBC execs of the 80s had been replaced by young, smart women, like BBC controller of comedy production Myfanwy Moore.

"Before I met her I thought, because of her stardom in the States, Tracey might be a bit of a spoiled LA woman – wealthy, pampered, may be even a bit of a dragon," Moore admits. "But she was the total opposite – very British still in sensibility and humour, casual, funny, thoughtful. She was a female icon for a whole generation – a great comic actress and impersonator, with perm and ra-ra skirts like a fun and funky role model, at the heart of popular culture. She is one of those rare things – a multi-talented performer who has a mainstream sensibility with a truly satirical streak. I'm glad Blighty has got her back."

Ullman, in turn, is glad to be back. "It's like coming home doing my voices here," she explains, "It's in my roots, in my soul. It's like

TRACEY NEVER WENT AWAY

So what happened to David “Not The Magician” Copperfield?

There is a straight-talking bluntness in his gruff Yorkshire voice when I ask the prickly question. What’s he been doing since Three of a Kind?

David Copperfield – “Not The Magician”, as one of his cruise-ship billings jokingly put it – starred in the hit 1980s BBC1 sketch series that propelled the prodigious talents of Lenny Henry and Tracey Ullman into the comedy stratosphere.

But while Three of a Kind gave Ullman and Henry a huge springboard into the upper echelons of showbusiness, including a brief stint as a pop star for Ullman, Copperfield has been left to pursue a more quotidian existence in the leaner furrows of the entertainment industry – a denizen of corporate gigs and cruise ships.

“I know what you are at. I have had that question a lot, where they say ‘Tracey’s done this and Lenny’s done that, whatever happened to you?’”

But he adds: “I wouldn’t put it in a negative way. The thing is I have had my golden years and I am platinum now. But I can’t look back with any regrets at all, and success for me is nothing to do with fame, or money, in that respect. Any working actor will tell you that. If you love the business, you love the business.”

To be fair to him, many British people probably don’t know that much about what Ullman has been doing, either – even though she is now said to be Britain’s highest-earning female comedian – having made her millions almost exclusively in Hollywood. As a result she has become largely invisible on the UK’s television screens.

But as Ullman prepares for her big British comeback with a new BBC1 sketch series, Copperfield, now 68, says he is happy with his lot. “I am away all the time now because I do a lot of these cruise ships. I am retired. I have got a pension but I still love the business. The ships are good, I like them, and they’ve got lovely theatres and the people are OK and I like working with people of my age.”

Copperfield has remained in contact with Ullman over the years. Copperfield’s daughter is an actress in LA and he used to meet up with his Three of a Kind co-star about once a year when he visited the city.

‘People say Tracey’s done this and Lenny’s done that’

DAVID COPPERFIELD

About five years ago Ullman even turned up to Copperfield’s daughter’s graduation play at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, to the astonishment of the cast. She treated all the actors to a meal afterwards, he said.

Copperfield has not seen as much of her recently, following the death of her husband Allan McKeown from prostate cancer. McKeown executive-produced Auf Wiedersehen Pet before they both moved to the US to further Ullman’s career in the 80s.

Copperfield says Ullman initially turned down the role on Three of a Kind because she wanted to be a serious actress. Her agent phoned back later and said she was in. He said the three of them “got on like a house on fire” from day one.

He adds: “We didn’t know we were going to be this nationwide thing. To walk around supermarkets and have people pointing at you, saying, ‘Are you him off the telly?’”

When asked if people will remember Ullman, Copperfield said: “I don’t think Tracey ever went away. I don’t believe in comebacks.”

being able to play football or play the piano, you suddenly just key into someone’s accent – being born in England, as soon as someone opens their mouth, you know where they’re from, what they aspire to, where they went to school. Our class system was embedded in me from an early age, and it still prevails.”

IT’S FAIR TO say she doesn’t generally get the respect from the younger comics – fan boys mourning Rik Mayall’s death rarely mention their collaboration, and she’s not part of Dawn French’s recent autobiographical show even though, in Jennifer Saunders’s words, “Tracey was a lesson in how to act funny.”

One star who does acknowledge their debt to Ullman is Catherine Tate. “I think she’s wonderful,” Ullman enthuses. “She sent me a lovely good luck letter when I started filming. I really appreciated her support, because she’s brilliant... and I love sketch comedy. There haven’t been any for a while so it seemed like a good chance to have a go, and it’s what I love to do. I guess I’m still putting on a show in my mum’s bedroom with her nightdresses on and I hope I’ll keep doing it until I’m 90...”

MOVE OVER Tyson Fury, here comes a real bout on the box. This is the week that two broadcasting heavyweights start slug-ging it out, after months of training, in the battle to be the undisputed champion of the 10pm news. On ITV the reinvention of News at Ten with new host Tom Bradby takes its next great leap forward with the arrival of (ex) BBC star Robert Peston as political editor. Meanwhile, over at the BBC, its flagship TV news programme – also known internally as “the Ten” – gets a 15-minute extension, billed by the BBC as a response to audience demand for more “news analysis and explanation”.

So is this just the latest twist in the competitive battle between the two venerable news programmes or is there more to it? In fact, of the rival broadcasters’ moves in respect of their top news bulletins, ITV’s is by far the more radical – although it might well be the BBC’s that has the most dramatic consequences.

The relaunch of ITV News at Ten with a single presenter, 48-year-old former royal correspondent and latterly political editor Tom Bradby, is clearly intended to make it a very different sort of programme. In an interview I did with him

Steve Hewlett reports on the new stars, new look and new formats transforming the news on ITV and BBC1

Ding ding... It's war at ten for The Media Show on Radio 4 at the end of last year, Bradby said he wanted to put the programme back on the map. ITV's News at Ten, he said, "was not as central to public life as it was when I started back in the 1990s". He said he wanted it to become "The Times of broadcasting", to be "more analytical" and offer viewers more "context, intelligence and analysis".

And above all, of course, to get noticed – hence the poaching of Robert Peston from the BBC. "He is one of the most thoughtful and interesting minds out there... if there's a big political story I want to see what Robert Peston wants to say," said Bradby. And the hope, of course, is that audiences will think the same.

‘ITV is aiming to take on the BBC by going up-market’

But the broader message couldn't have been clearer: ITV News at Ten – whose ratings had settled down to roughly half those of its BBC rival – was aiming to learn from both Channel 4 News and Newsnight. In other words, to take on the BBC by going up-market. Indeed, in the week of my interview with him, the programme devoted lengthy slots to a story about Iran's nuclear capability. Throw in a new, deliberately conversational presenter style – modelled explicitly on the great American news anchors of yore – and it adds up to a pretty significant move away from News at Ten as it used to be.

Very little of which has gone down well with some of Bradby's ITV colleagues, who fear, some out-of-joint noses notwithstanding, a further decline in their flagship programme's ratings. They suspect some ITV viewers who are used to a more traditional, fast-moving, more tabloid approach may lose interest, while BBC viewers already used to more analysis and context will stay where they are.

However, with Bradby, Peston and Allegra Stratton – Newsnight's political editor, also poached from the BBC – joining as national editor, and a new on-air look due in spring, ITV is definitely, as they say, going for it.

THE BBC'S MOVE to extend its 10pm news, meanwhile, appears at first sight to be little more than tinkering. No radical change to content or format, rather just more of the same – an additional five minutes or so of national and international news and around another seven of nations and regions. "The news bulletin will now have even more scope for considered and in-depth takes on the most significant news of the day," said the BBC's controller of daily news programmes, Gavin Allen. And all driven, according to the BBC, by audience demand. When pressed, the BBC's evidence for that ▷ ◁ stems from the fact that during a five-month period in the lead-up to last year's general election (in which the 10pm BBC News was extended by 15 minutes most evenings), viewers stayed with it and didn't switch off. The BBC also says it has private audience research showing people want "authority", "depth" and "analysis" at that time of night – although there's no direct evidence of people clamouring for more of it. So altogether, hardly radical at all.

I understand the original idea came from BBC director of news James Harding, who wanted a complete makeover of the evening news on BBC1. With a brand-new news hour running from 10pm to 11pm, encompassing national, international, nations' and regions' news whose second half-hour had more current affairs content, this would have been radical indeed.

For a start it would have required a pretty thorough rejig of BBC1's evening schedules and, critically, would have called into question the position of weekday current-affairs stalwart Newsnight at 10.30pm on BBC2. Various options were looked at, including the idea that Newsnight might run either much earlier in the evening – say at 8pm, which would not, I imagine, have gone down especially well over at BBC2 – or much later, say at 11pm, as a more discursive, after-dark-style programme.

BUT AS SO often happens at the BBC, which finds radical options very hard to deal with, months of internal debate saw the really bold options talked out by stakeholders with too much to lose. In terms of what licence-payers want and need that might be the right outcome, but it leaves behind the BBC's bureaucratic imperative to be seen to do something. Which is how we get to the BBC's seemingly rather unadventurous plan to extend the current 10pm BBC News.

But here's the rub. By extending it in this way, questions still persist about BBC2's Newsnight, which will now overlap its BBC1 sibling by fully 15 minutes. Internal estimates suggest that could cost Newsnight between 10 and 15 per cent of its audience (which in November 2015 stood at a weekly average of 661,000), as well as creating considerable disruption for viewers who might want to watch the whole of the new 10pm BBC News on BBC1 as well as Newsnight.

None of which is ideal for a programme still recovering from its Jimmy Savile debacle and the loss of long-term host Jeremy Paxman. In fairness, Newsnight's audience – which has declined from a weekly average of 917,000 in November 2008 – has stabilised. And editorially the programme has chalked up some notable recent successes, such as its coverage of Kids Company, Government plans to change tax credits, bullying in the Conservative Party and the Paris atrocities.

Nevertheless a 15-minute overlap with the 10pm BBC News on BBC1 will, albeit unintentionally, leave Newsnight facing big questions about its future. One option that's been discussed is to run it on a 15-minute delay on the BBC News channel, although that too would be fraught.

And then there's what to do about the ever-popular Question Time, which follows the 10pm BBC News on BBC1 on Thursday evenings, and now doesn't finish until 11.45pm. And what about Andrew Neil's The Week, which has been pushed even later still?

Which is why a BBC bureaucratic fudge that no one really wanted could very easily end up having rather more significant consequences than ITV's much more radical move – whether or not it works out in the end.

Drugs and drink may be in the past, but the new Boy George says he's no soft touch

IAN DERRY

BOY GEORGE – 80s pop legend, off the mainstream radar (busy as he may well have been) for 20-plus years, bad lad for a while – is now fully rehabilitated as a newly installed judge on The Voice UK. In which context, we meet. In his trailer, no less. Very glamorous! Admittedly, the glitz is slightly marred by the vehicle being parked on wasteland in east London, convenient for access to the recording studio next door.

Even so, the lad is most certainly back. Redemption beckons alluringly – if redemption is required. I think it probably is, given his 2008 conviction and subsequent 15-month prison sentence (of which he served four months) for assault and false imprisonment. He's definitely ready for it.

The trailer is well stocked with the trappings of celebrity, a surfeit of fresh fruit platters vying with a similar surfeit of publicists, pals, personal assistants. I settle opposite George across a table. He looks happy and healthy. It's good to see. We start by talking about his new role.

"It's a great gig. It's what I do. I love singers. It's fun." He's nothing if not canny, however. "I've got to think about people that love me that are watching the show. My audience. My age group. I've got to think what songs are going to resonate with them." To that end, he's persuaded two of the acts under his wing to cover, respectively, a Pink Floyd and a Rod Stewart number. "I also suggested Elvis but that's been rejected," he chuckles.

'A lot of young people can't take criticism'

How would he define this audience he's seeking to satisfy? "It's been a real mixture over the years. Lots of girls, a few gay men, lots of mums. It's very accidental. You get kids who've heard about you from their parents. And then there are kids who are into make-up and dressing up who've seen me on Instagram and like the way I do my face. I see a lot of kids doing my old look. It's a Halloween favourite in America."

We stick with make-up for a while. Not my area of expertise, but illuminating in terms of how George is perceived. He is, he says, something of an icon in this regard. "Many people will say, 'You inspired me.' Normal people, whatever that word means, and also misfits and freaks and exhibitionists, which I love."

At 54, he isn't, he confesses, very experimental these days. "There isn't anything I haven't done to my face. I'm more into the Joan Collins realm now. I know what looks good on me and stick to it." He takes pride and much amusement in his niche in cosmetic history. "Those eyebrows I had in 1984, you see them everywhere now, normal girls on buses! They think Kim Kardashian invented it but in fact it was Liz Taylor and Carmen Miranda. That's where I got it from."

Back in the day, he says, as a young working-class kid from a large Irish (his real name is George O'Dowd) family in Woolwich, south-east London, he would do his face conscientiously every day. "As soon as I discovered eyebrow pencils, it was, 'Oh my God, look what I can do!' I lost jobs because of it. Becoming a performer was the only way really. I was unemployable." Nowadays, the full rig is strictly for "telly and Sunday best".

The great advantage of having a distinctive look, he says, is you can take it off and be anonymous on the Tube, the more so because he's naturally quite butch. "I was pretty smooth and hairless until I was 21 then suddenly I turned into a rugby-type guy. I remember one of my backing singers freaking out once because I had a hairy chest. People have this idea of me as a little quaint frilly thing in the corner."

FAR FROM IT, which his forthcoming stint on The Voice will no doubt demonstrate. "I've been told I've been too critical. But on a lot of these shows, some 17-year-old kid is told, 'You're amazing,' and no, what you are is potentially amazing. But you're pitchy. You hit some bum notes. You impersonated this person. That's what they need to hear. And you can say that without being nasty. A lot of young people don't want criticism. But if you can't take criticism, I don't really want you on my team."

He is not, he says, "looking for perfection. I'm looking for honesty and emotion. Some of my favourite performers – Bob Dylan, Leonard Cohen – are not great singers." He is himself, he says, an emotional singer rather than one who "can hit a million notes". But you're better than Bob Dylan, I say. "I'd never say that," he laughs. "He's one of my heroes. I can see the headline: ▷ ◁ 'Boy George says he's better than Bob Dylan.' I don't think like that. You can't separate the person from what they sing, how they sing, what they wear, how they walk. It's a totality."

It hasn't been entirely easy, he admits, being the new judge on the show. He's had to assert himself to attract the acts he rated. "One kid, I had to fight Paloma to get her on my team. Paloma was going, 'I'm a misfit,' I was like, 'Babe, no no no. You can't sit next to Boy George and talk about being a fg misfit.'"

'Paloma, you can't sit next to me and talk about being a misfit'

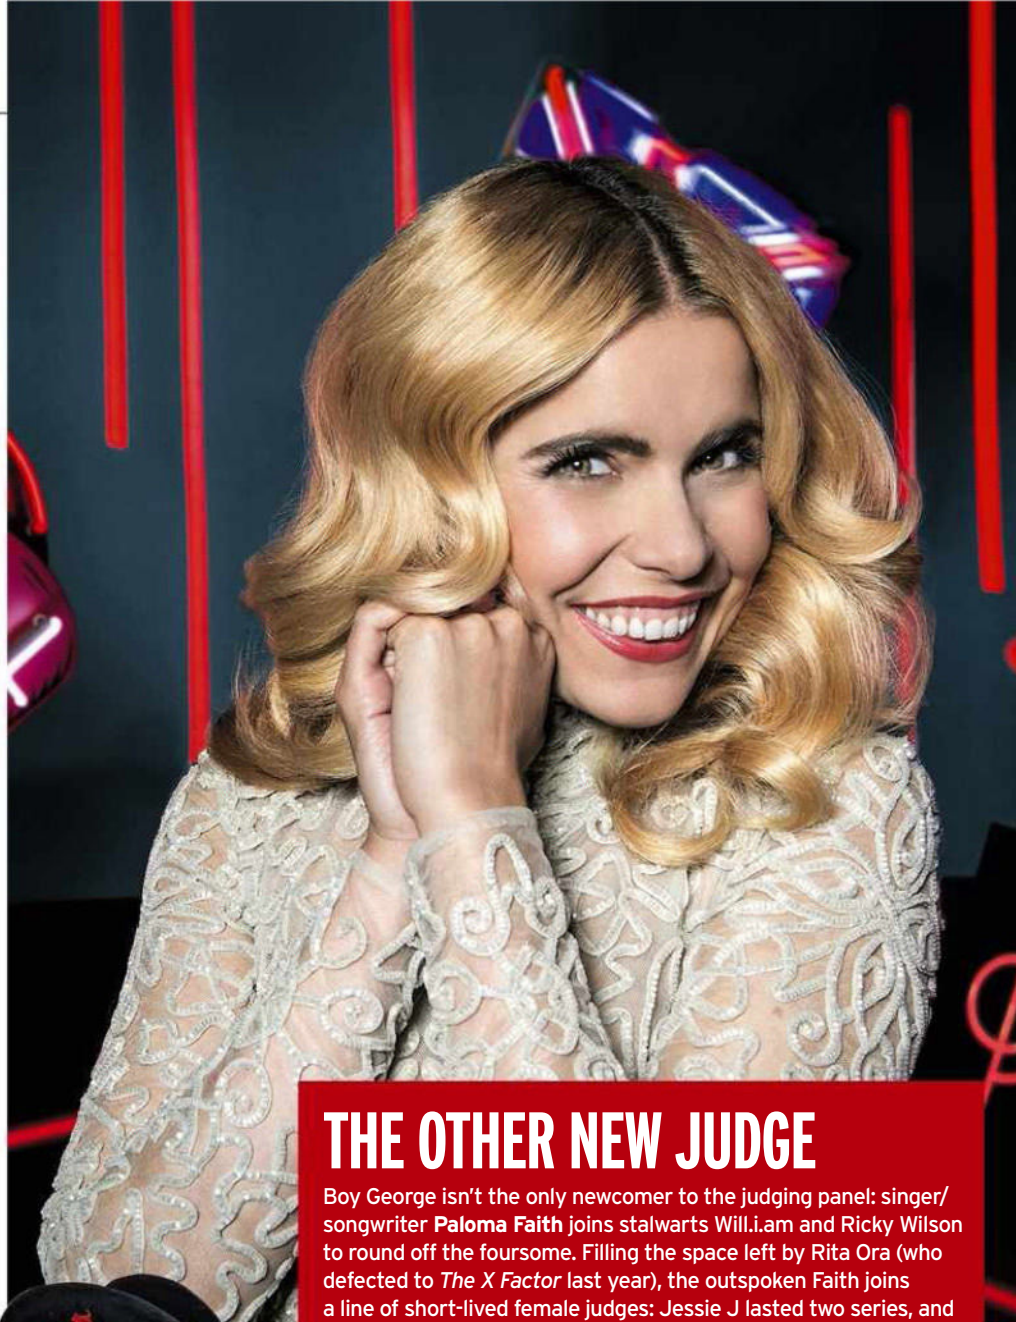

Not that he's a misfit any more. He's pop royalty, in fact, with famous friends and homes in north London and Ibiza. And sober, what's more, enjoying his yoga, Buddhism and vegetarianism. On good terms with his family, too: mum, four brothers and sister. "Typical Irish, all in each other's business," he giggles. His philosophy these days is, he says, "Be nice to your mum. Juice. Chant".

STILL, CONTENT AS he was, he knew he needed a new burst of media exposure. He's about to get it, and is intent on making it work for him. He isn't sniffy about talent shows in the way some of his peers tend to be. "It's just the way things are now. We had MTV in a way bands before didn't. Things change. I admire people that don't sit on their arses. If someone is hardworking and clever and gets out there, that's great. OK, if I wanna have a row with someone, I'll say, 'Didn't they teach you manners at stage school?' But really, I'd love to have gone to stage school. Somewhere you can sing and dance and show off? Brilliant."

He hasn't done much TV previously, not since his Culture Club heyday 30 years ago. "I've been immersed in the dance world, DJ-ing for the past 20 years. I hadn't put a record out in a long time. Then I did radio and a tour of America and I realised that old-school way of doing things was over. I'd had an incredible career. I can't be what I was and I don't want to be what I was. The world is different now and I want to confront it."

But he's done the whole reunion tour thing, hasn't he? "Oh yeah. That's feeding a beast that is sometimes hungry. And nostalgia has never felt like purgatory for me. I don't hate it. I don't ever go on stage and go, 'Oh God, I've gotta sing Karma Chameleon.'"

There is, he says, an initiation process as the new kid on the panel. "There's a bit of 'Oh, Boy George hasn't been on the telly much' and 'When did he last have a hit record?' The point I make is, 'Love, look,

THE OTHER NEW JUDGE

Boy George isn't the only newcomer to the judging panel: singer/songwriter Paloma Faith joins stalwarts Will.i.am and Ricky Wilson to round off the foursome. Filling the space left by Rita Ora (who defected to The X Factor last year), the outspoken Faith joins a line of short-lived female judges: Jessie J lasted two series, and Kylie Minogue and Ora one each. Faith, 34, won the Brit Award for British female solo artist in 2015, and has released three albums since 2009. She sang a version of World in Union that fronted ITV's coverage of the Rugby World Cup.

I've had lots of ups and downs. If you think that if you don't get this then it's all over, trust me, it ain't. Even the great Tom Jones has had dips. But look at that career!"

Ah yes, the great Tom Jones, the judge whom George has replaced, the judge who didn't want to be replaced, by George or anybody. "People have tried to drag me into a row. I love Tom Jones!

I've loved him since I was a kid. I was in Wales the other night – I did a Steve Strange tribute – and it was the perfect opportunity for me to talk about Tom. He's a genius. I've nothing but respect for him. But I'm grateful to have the job. I'm going to do the best job I can.

I AM INTERESTED in the things that have disappeared,” says Barry Humphries as he lowers his stately behind into a BBC chair, revealing wildly odd socks and a pair of black suede slip-on shoes with gold buckles that Prince might regard as racy.

We’re here to discuss Humphries’s Radio 2 series about the big band music and light opera he listened to as boy in suburban Melbourne, during and just before the Second World War. But the really interesting thing is that Humphries himself hasn’t disappeared. While contemporaries and friends like Peter Cook didn’t get much beyond middle age, the Australian comic, raconteur, stage actor, author, book collector and dispenser of bons mots has bestridden our culture for nearly half a century.

“I was never drawn to sport,” he says, settling into the seat after some huffing and puffing, “to which I attribute my long life.” It’s that simple then, no tennis or cricket? “Well, I suppose all those people were huge consumers of alcohol and I stopped drinking 45 years ago. So, my continuation is largely due to that moment.”

tricky first 45 years out of the way, to pour just the cheekiest of gins? "No," he says. "When you see people who drink getting sick and bad tempered and misanthropic and self-destructive one feels dismayed, you know, depressed by it. And I have a very happy life."

I mention, as politely as I can, that when he shed his fedora, scarf and flapping coat, the 81-year-old had revealed a few more pounds than he'd carried in his prime. "The theatre is very good physical exercise," he says. "I've put on weight since I've stopped working on the stage." Stopped working, does that mean... Humphries answers the question before I can ask it. "You shouldn't believe any of Dame Edna's announced retirements. Not for a second."

DAME EDNA EVERAGE, it's worth recalling, is the character that has served as the main vehicle for Humphries's incisive and often uncomfortable wit, since the Melbourne housewife superstar first appeared in public in 1954, to be joined later by the dipsomaniac Australian diplomat Sir Les Patterson. In fact, Edna has been around so long she's outlived her own model in Madame Tussauds. "They had a very good Edna," says Humphries. "But it's not there any more. I've been turned into the kneecaps of One Direction. That's the worst sort of sorrow, to be melted down at Madame Tussauds." They've really melted you down? "No, they've shifted me to the Madame Tussauds in Amsterdam. That's not exactly an elevation, is it? I graciously accept these occasional disappointments. Though they've probably got Adele there now."

I sense Adele's warbling isn't Humphries's idea of singing. Rather he advocates the 1930s ▷

◁ siren Hildegard, who “had a beautiful voice and would play the piano in long white gloves”. His show also features the tenor Richard Tauber, whose records young Barry would play on “a wind-up portable gramophone on a tree stump in the bush”. Otherwise, as they awaited the Japanese bombers that never came (“we taped cellophane to the windows to stop them shattering”), the Humphries family would listen to British comedians on the radio. “I still have a soft spot for radio,” he says. “It’s an intimate and flexible medium, you have to listen. Whereas the telly is a kind of wallpaper.”

‘Les is refined compared with most Australian politicians’

HIS WASN’T, HE admits, a very Australian youth. “There were no native trees, just English elms, silver birches, oaks. We had a picture of Churchill in the kitchen.” He never encountered an aborigine in Australia and only saw his first kangaroo in the flesh at London Zoo when he arrived in the late 1950s. He says this affinity with Englishness is professional as well as personal. “My grandfather came from Manchester in the 1880s and I think of myself as a northern comedian. There’s a northern tradition in this country. You don’t think of great Berkshire comedians, but you do think of Yorkshire and Lancashire. The further north you go, the funnier people are.”

Humphries was an outrider for a wave of ultra-talented Australians that crashed onto our shores in the 1960s. “I was a bit earlier than Clive James and Germaine Greer,” he says. “But I think we all brought a critical eye. There was something quite smug about 1960s Britain, self-regarding. Our astringent views were salutary.”

Humphries enjoys being astringent, though he hides truths in statements that seem designed to shock. “Why do you think Downton Abbey is so popular in the States?” he asks at one point. “Because there are no black people in it.”

And the more obviously liberal Greer continues to cause trouble, most recently with the transgender lobby, when she said of trans women, “Just because you lop off your d and then wear a dress, it doesn’t make you a woman.”

Which didn’t, on the surface, seem that liberal. “Germaine is very, very paradoxical,” says Humphries. “To the point of being a bit of a ratbag actually. But she’s very bright, very nice and her stuff is very good.”

And what does a man who has spent much of his life pretending to be a woman make of the debate about gender fluidity? “I don’t even connect it. What I do is just acting and an actor should be able to impersonate anything – a piano, a tree, a Melbourne housewife who thinks she’s a megastar. It really doesn’t have a sexual dimension. I suppose it’s very good, if people feel that they are housed in the body of the wrong sex, that they do something about it. Though if it involves surgery it’s very radical.”

He clearly likes Greer and laughs aloud when he recalls her answer when asked why she first left Australia: “It’s so boring!” She didn’t endear herself to her countrymen with that.”

Humphries has long upset those same countrymen with Patterson, the boorish drunk who has become their chief representative overseas. “But Les Patterson is extremely refined,” he says, “compared with most Australian politicians.”

Is causing offence important to Humphries? “Quite important,” he admits. “It’s very easy to become a safe figure and tempting, too, to want to be all things to all people.”

He claims to be baffled by political correctness and reckons to have been an early victim in 2003 when Dame Edna’s agony column was dropped by Vanity Fair. “A woman asked: ‘I’m thinking of learning Spanish, is this a good idea?’ Edna said, ‘Why Spanish, who would you talk to – your maid?’ Now we would read it as Edna satirising snobbish people who think maids and Spanish-speaking people are inferior. [Actress] Salma Hayek was on the cover and rallied a lot of Mexicans and death threats were received by [editor] Graydon Carter. Unbelievable! And my column was suspended. You lose your job.”

They surrendered? “Oh yes. Carter wrote a pathetic editorial saying there is a type of humour where you say the opposite to what you mean.”

Humphries bemoans the modern inability to appreciate irony or satire. “Imagine if the BBC tried to do Till Death Us Do Part again today, with Alf Garnett ranting against black people? It couldn’t be done. There is a new puritanism that we are experiencing, a nervousness. I mentioned some ideas to the BBC [Dame Edna was on Michael McIntyre’s show over Christmas]. I wanted to say something about Mr Corbyn and a faceless, nameless person at the BBC said, ‘Then you have also have to say something about Mr Cameron!’ As if there wasn’t any bias at the BBC at all!”

IF HUMPHRIES LOVES the BBC, which I think he might, it’s the BBC of long ago, when he first arrived here in search of conventions to kick over, the “extremely free BBC of the 1960s”, when the talent had their own remarkable social club. “I met David Attenborough recently and he said, ‘Oh Barry, we used to see a lot of each other in the BBC Club in the 60s.’ This man who must be nearly 90 remembered the talks we’d had all those years ago. It was really a hotbed of alcoholism, no one ever seemed to go back to their office after being in there, but it was interesting. There were directors and writers, Marty Feldman, the early Pythons, Morecambe and Wise, Dick Emery, Frankie Howerd, Spike Milligan...”

“It was wonderful really and it was exciting and they would try anything. There was a real feeling that we were making entertainment. It’s not such a free place any more. There’s a fear of treading on people’s toes and I don’t like it.”

With that his backside lifts, and the elaborate business of re-robing Barry Humphries in his fedora, scarf and flapping coat begins anew.

Chef Angela Hartnett wants to hear about your local food hero

IF YOU WANT to taste the best eggs of your life, head to the New Forest. Specifically to Fluffetts Farm. I run a restaurant down there at Lime Wood Hotel and head chef Luke Holder introduced me to the family-run business a few years ago. They provide free-range eggs for the local area. Their chickens are fed on marigolds, parsley and carrot tops and the result is the most wonderful yellow yolk. Use their eggs to make fresh pasta and you won't be disappointed.

My maternal grandma was Italian and as a teenager I loved helping her make tortelli and tagliatelle. She taught me to appreciate good food and also to pay attention to where it came from. It was an early lesson in the importance of local produce that stayed with me as I started out as a chef.

It's also why I wanted to be a judge for the BBC Food and Farming Awards, which celebrate local food heroes across the UK. These awards aren't about a group of chefs picking their favourite high-end restaurants. They're about local communities nominating the people whose food has made a difference to their lives whether it be the village cheesemonger, a school cook or the team running the local hospital kitchen. And I don't think there's ever been a more important moment to highlight the importance of good quality, local produce.

We like to think we're a nation of foodies but how can we be when only a small fraction of the population can afford to eat well? Local, affordable produce needs to be available to everyone, whatever their budget.

I went on holiday to Devon last summer and did a big food shop in a local deli. When I looked at the receipt, I initially couldn't believe how much I had spent. But then I thought, of course it's expensive. This is a small shop selling high-quality produce in a tiny village. How can it possibly be expected to compete with supermarket prices?

BUT AS A shopper on a budget it's tricky to support your local fishmonger when you can buy salmon fillets for £2 cheaper in a supermarket. How do we tackle this? It's a tricky one. In an ideal world the big supermarkets would give local businesses stands in their stores. The little organic shop around the corner from where I live in East London has just disappeared because its rent shot up. These smaller producers need support and supermarkets have a role to play.

We also need to rethink what we import. There are some things that we shouldn't feel guilty about sourcing from other countries. We have some great charcuterie in Britain but for me, there's nothing better than a Spanish pata negra ham. Likewise I don't think there's anything wrong with getting parmesan from Italy. I don't want some imitation on my pasta; I want the real McCoy [see Susie Dent's Dictionary Corner, page 159].

Supermarkets argue that they have no choice but to import when consumers demand things like strawberries in December. But if strawberries weren't on the shelves for a few months, I don't think people would abandon the supermarket. As consumers we just need to be less demanding.

In the meantime, I'll keep asking Fluffetts to deliver their eggs to London and they'll more than likely keep refusing – they don't want to spread themselves too thin. It's a savvy move on their part and one which I suppose I should be grateful for. Those eggs are so tasty that I'm happy to keep them for myself.

Perils in space

Astronaut Steven Smith reveals the dangers of life in orbit for Tim Peake Flying is said to be the safest way to travel. But does whizzing around Earth at 17,000mph aboard the 747-sized International Space Station count? As Britain's Tim Peake (left) gets to grips with the new year in space, he'll share his hopes - and fears - with Brian Cox and Dara O Briain via a video link in BBC2's Stargazing Live.

"In orbit my standard emotion is joy," says astronaut Steven Smith, a Nasa ISS veteran. But he also knows that it's a dangerous universe out there...

1 BEWARE RADIATION

ISS astronauts are classed as radiation workers: a single day on board could expose them to four months' worth of UK background radiation. And spacewalkers briefly receive higher exposures.

Space radiation comes from two sources: energetic particles from the Sun, peaking at times of high solar activity, and galactic cosmic rays - atomic nuclei shot across the universe by ancient cosmic explosions.

Radiation from solar flares monitored between Apollo missions was strong enough to have incapacitated or even killed Moonwalkers. Galactic cosmic rays are more hazardous still, because these high-energy particles cannot practically be deflected - astronauts heading to Mars should expect every cell nucleus in their bodies to be struck during the trip.

LIFE-SUPPORT SUIT

Luca Parmitano had to abort his spacewalk from the ISS in July 2013 when his helmet began filling with water

‘You see nothing beneath your feet and Earth is 400km away’

ASTRONAUT STEVEN SMITH

2 SPACEWALK TO OBLIVION?

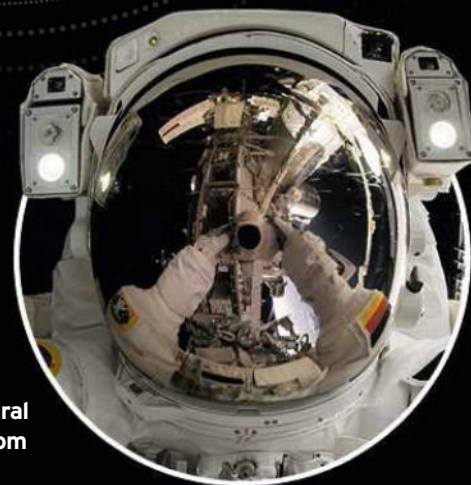

“During a spacewalk, you might suddenly realise you’re gripping tightly to a handhold for no conscious reason,” recalls Smith. “I think it’s because you see nothing touching the bottom of your feet – and Earth is 400km away.” But the nightmare of drifting away from the space station is unrealistic. Spacewalkers stay tethered at all times and have a “jetpack of last resort”, the Simplified Aid for EVA Rescue (SAFER). But astronauts do lose accessories, if not themselves: in 2008 a toolbox drifted away, but fortunately it posed no collision risk. What might happen in the case of a lost spacewalker was shown by the 2006 Suitsat experiment, in which a Russian spacesuit was turned into a radio beacon and jettisoned from the space station. It floated ahead of the ISS for seven months, after which it burnt up in the atmosphere. Spacesuits aren’t always reliable, either. European Space Agency astronaut Luca Parmitano had his spacewalk aborted in July 2013 when water began to leak into his helmet, covering his eyes and nose. Other spacewalks have been terminated early due to damaged gloves – a particular weak point. Astronaut life insurance rates are five times higher if the mission includes extravehicular activity. “Spacewalkers are in a dangerous situation, but make the work look easy and fun,” says Smith.

3 DODGE FLYING SHRAPNEL

The ISS is regularly assailed by tiny micrometeoroids and small pieces of orbital debris that are both natural and artificial in origin. Dust from comet trails and meteoroids mingles with paint flecks, frozen water droplets or particles from solid rocket exhaust, among other jetsam. Speed, not size, presents the real danger: even a 1mm metal fragment can strike with the force of a bullet. Natural micrometeoroids possess higher velocities still, but are comparatively rarer and less dense.

Critical ISS modules are shielded to withstand objects up to 1cm in diameter: multiple aluminium “bumpers”, plus layers of super-strong fabrics Nextel and Kevlar, absorb the impact before such objects reach the inner shell. These fragments do, however, still cause damage: one window of the ISS’s cupola was pockmarked in 2012 and bullet-sized holes have been spotted in its solar arrays in 2013 and 2014.

Spacewalkers are also vulnerable, as some parts of a spacesuit have no shielding – the helmet visor, for instance. However, Nasa calculates the odds of a “critical penetration” forming a hole larger than 4mm in the 14-layer spacesuit during a six-hour spacewalk as one in 31,000.

4 DUCK – DEADLY DEBRIS

More than 20,000 items of orbital debris larger than 10cm are tracked by ground-based radar.

"Collision avoidance manoeuvres" are performed if the collision likelihood is higher than one in 10,000. At one time the ISS averaged one manoeuvre a year, but they're becoming more frequent: four were performed between April 2011 and April 2012, and two in 2015. In July the crew were ordered into their two Soyuz lifeboats when debris from a 36-year-old weather satellite was spotted too late to make a pre-planned manoeuvre.

Debris comes mostly from defunct satellites, which are driven to explode by sunlight heating up their batteries or surplus fuel. Collisions are a growing source of debris: Nasa expert Don Kessler observed that, once past a certain critical mass, collisions will give rise to more debris in a chain reaction. This "Kessler syndrome" is becoming a reality: debris levels in low-Earth orbit have increased by 50 per cent since 2008, helped along by the 2009 collision of Russia's Kosmos-2251 with the US Iridium 33 satellite, as well as China's 2007 missile test targeting its own weather satellite.

SPACE JUNK

5 FIRE ALERT!

Fire behaves differently in microgravity: it stays put rather than spreading, a plasma bubble that burns hotter and hotter, producing blinding smoke. When fire broke out on Mir in 1997 it burnt for 14 minutes, and the six-man crew's fire extinguishers failed to put it out. Instead, Mir's blazing oxygen generator went on burning and spewing blobs of molten metal until its fuel was finally exhausted.

Fire may have claimed an entire space station already – Russia's Salyut 2, which broke up in 1973. The leading theory on why it depressurised in the first place is an electrical fire, which is thought to have burnt so hot that it melted the station's hull. Thankfully, no one was yet on board.

Flames are harder to spot in microgravity, burning bluer and dimmer. The space station has a fire detection and suppression system to monitor for smoke, but it can be triggered by normal dust.

BLUE HOT

6 BRACE! BRACE! BRACE!

Docking the spacecraft that supply crews, foodstuffs and fuel to the orbital station seems a routine affair, but it can go wrong. In 1997, an unmanned spacecraft went out of control and crashed into the Spektr module of the Mir space station. Crewmen felt their ears pop as air was sucked out of the fracture in the hull. The damaged module had to be cut off from the rest of the station. The accident was a result of an experiment in manual control. Luckily when Tim Peake's crew docked manually, it all went to plan.

ISS supply craft rely on the Kurs radar-based docking system. The European Space Agency's Automated Transfer Vehicle (ATV) employs radio and optical tracking, while Japan's H-II and the commercial Dragon are both grappled to berths by astronauts controlling the ISS's robotic arm. But accidents can occur: during a docking in April 2013, Progress struck a laser reflector that was relied on for ATV dockings. SEAN BLAIR

You think no one could push you that far? Think again, says Derren Brown

Derren Brown: Pushed to the Edge

Tuesday 9.00pm C4

YOU SIT AT one end of a row of people, watching a man who is standing, drumsticks in hand, over a drum positioned before him. When everyone is quiet, he slowly and deliberately beats the drum, three times. One, two, three.

The examiner in this famous Asch Experiment, watching from the corner of the room, asks each of you how many times the man beat the drum. Three times, you think. Easy. Except now, as people give their answers along the row, they're all saying "Four". Did they mishear? At first it was funny, but now you're confused. You replay the sound of the drum in your head – bang, bang, bang. It was only three times. How could everyone else have heard four?

When it comes to your turn, what answer do you give? Three? Four?

Despite what you know you heard, you're very likely to agree with the group and say "Four". Unaware that everyone else has been secretly primed to give the wrong answer, you are more concerned with fitting in than you are with saying what you know to be true.

In Pushed to the Edge, my new series for Channel 4, we set up an elaborate experiment to see how far this desire to conform and comply could be extended. Chris Kingston, who has no idea he's being filmed, finds himself at a high-stakes event, surrounded by actors. Unaware he's taking part in a television show, he becomes a pawn in an elaborately fabricated social experiment. The goal is to answer one question: can social compliance be used to make a person push a living, breathing human being off a roof, seemingly to his death?

Few of us would like to think we could be manipulated into committing such an act. We have a strong sense of our moral threshold and know how far we can be pressurised. We have a clear-cut sense of how we would react in situations, which sadly bears little relation to what we actually do. That's because we can keep hold of our moral values yet behave in ways that contradict them. We'll do anything to justify our behaviour to ourselves. Other people push into queues because they're rude; we do it because we're in a terrible rush and find ourselves in

'We live in a world
are made to do evil'

exceptional and forgivable circumstances.

How do you go about testing social compliance? An ex-faith healer gave me a good metaphor for how he managed to get his flock to part with so much money. When you boil a frog, he said, you can't put it straight into hot water, or it'll jump straight out. Put it comfortably in cold water, however, and you can slowly bring the pan to the boil. To create Chris's journey, we had to begin with the psychological equivalent of tepid water: an actor asks him near the start to mislabel some meat-filled sausage rolls as vegetarian. It's an innocuous (but clearly wrong) start. What follows is a dark, frequently hilarious journey to a place where Chris is told to push a man to his death. And in the same way that we're hopeless at predicting our own responses, this show defies expectations, too.

WE LIVE IN a world where good people are made to do evil things, which shows how compliant we can be in the face of an ideology or a charismatic figure. Even at a social level, we go against our better instincts all the time: at a party we let ourselves down, saying things we shouldn't and not saying things we should. And at a deeper, private level there is a kind of compliance happening in the way we let others assume control of our life-narratives. Our parents hand us the script of their own un-lived lives when we're very young and we may never gain authorship for ourselves. It's good to learn how to, because when we shut down areas of ourselves to comply with others' wishes, we develop anxieties and pathologies.

Sometimes we need a strong emotional experience to teach us the value of honouring our own stories: to say "three" instead of "four" when we know "three" to be true.

Chris was given such an experience. Hopefully, for some, the rollercoaster journey of this show will offer the same advantage. Sometimes we need to push back.

THE STORY of how Britain's railways came to traverse the country's least hospitable landscapes is not a dry lesson in 19th-century history. It is, in some ways, our Wild West. Like the frontiersfolk sweeping across America at the same time, the Victorian construction workers were taming the wilderness and creating the template for a modern nation. And yes, there were horses by their side, as well as saloon bar shacks where they could slake their thirst.

Here's how it worked. Imagine you need to get a railway line across a large valley. The train company buys the land and, virtually overnight, it plunks an instant "city" (a shanty town of prefabricated wooden huts) in the middle of nowhere to house the workers who will build a viaduct.

And here's what's most amazing. Once the building work is over, every piece of the shanty town is dismantled, every last piece of wood is scooped up, and every person leaves. The caravan moves on to the next place – ready for a new shanty town to arrive and then disappear.

This is what happened for real at Ribbleshead, in the Yorkshire Dales, 17 miles east of Morecambe, between 1870 and 1875.

It's not known how many of these settlements – which often housed 1,000 people at a time – were created in Victorian Britain, but there were scores of them across the country and each was self-sufficient. They had pubs, boarding houses, sometimes a school, church, post office, library and hospital. Even the thousands of bricks that the men used to build the viaducts and bridges were made in brickworks on-site. (Every shanty town also had a supply of "dolly mops" – on-site prostitutes.)

ITV's period drama Jericho, which stars Jessica Raine, is named after a real shanty town that grew up to build the Ribbleshead Viaduct that still stands today, 100ft high, spanning 24 arches and carrying train passengers and freight from Leeds to Carlisle and beyond.

At its peak, 7,000 navvies were working on the line, nearly 1,000 of whom lived in Jericho and surrounding settlements – making the temporary towns much bigger than the nearby villages and hamlets of today. Yet not a single wooden hut remains.

"It's strangely magical that a town appeared from nowhere and then disappeared again overnight," says Jericho's writer, Steve Thompson. There are, he says, a few tiny signs at Ribbleshead of some of the buildings' foundations, "but other than that, you're just aware that a town was there – and that it vanished. That's really peculiar and strangely poetic."

Less mystical is the danger the men faced every day. Health and safety had not been invented as a workplace concept – industrial accidents were commonplace. Yet the biggest killer was not misadventure but disease. One smallpox epidemic at Ribbleshead killed 80.

Meanwhile, the dirty drinking water was perhaps the most dangerous element of the building site – which helps explain why "beer was drunk for breakfast, lunch and dinner," according to Thompson.

WHOLE FAMILIES DIED and were buried, often in unmarked graves. A plaque at St Leonard's Church in the hamlet of Chapel-le-Dale is dedicated to "the memory of the many men, women and children resident in this parish who died through accident or disease during the construction of the Settle to Carlisle Railway".

Thompson explains: "Death was ever-present. It was part of the rhythm of their lives. People could go to work and not come back that night."

Tony Freschini, a retired rail engineer credited with saving the Settle-to-Carlisle line when it was threatened with closure in the late 1980s, brings home the achievement of these builders: "You look at the line and you can't help but be impressed by what these people did in about six years. Today you wouldn't get a motorway built in that time. And yet they did it all those years ago on horseback and brawn. It's not bad, is it?"

Two of our own

Danny Murphy salutes the hottest strikers in Britain

S EVEN YEARS AGO, Tottenham Hotspur v Leicester City would have been your classic FA Cup David v Goliath battle. Now, it's a match between two of the best sides in the Premier League and two of the hottest strikers in England. And they're both home-grown veterans of the lower leagues.

This weekend's FA Cup tie will be the first opportunity of the year to see Spurs' Harry Kane and Leicester's Jamie Vardy go head to head. Either one could be England's first-choice striker come Euro 2016 in June.

"Vardy's is an inspirational story: he's achieved more than any of us thought he would," says former Spurs midfielder and BBC pundit Danny Murphy. "It's great for England that we have two strikers in such wonderful form."

The England manager Roy Hodgson agrees and says that 28-year-old Vardy has made himself a "very strong contender" for an England place. This is the same player who three years ago was playing for non-league Fleetwood Town.

Both Vardy and Kane, who honed his skills at Millwall and Orient, typify what fans tell themselves is a uniquely British footballing spirit: run for ever, be a bloody nuisance and succeed through sheer hard graft. Of course, it's not just England players who can sprint, but the stats don't lie: in the first few months of the season, Kane and Vardy ran further than any other forward in the league – 80 miles and 77.7 miles respectively.

"They're similar in terms of work ethic," says Murphy. "I never watch either and think, 'C'mon, do more.' If anything, they work so hard for the team that it can be detrimental to their own play.

"Harry Kane is probably the more powerful player. He's better in the air, more reliable in his hold-up play. Vardy is someone who loves to run behind without the ball, to harass defenders."

But with the transfer window open, both Spurs and Leicester may get a call from bigger clubs in desperate need of forward firepower.

"Players with ambition will have certain big clubs they want to be at," warns Murphy. "The problem comes when a player is made aware one of the bigger clubs wants them. Then it's difficult to maintain their level of performance."

BUT THANKS TO the massive pot of TV money, surely there's no need for any Premier League club to make a quick buck in January? "Clubs are finding it easier to keep players for longer," says Murphy. "Let's not hide from it: while the ambition to play for a big club is there, there is also a financial carrot, too. I don't think a club like Leicester can hold on to players just because they're having a good season. If you look at Tottenham, it's a bit different. They're trying to move forward, build a stadium, build a squad that will become a power."

A squad built around Harry Kane? "The great asset that they have with Kane, of course, is, as the song goes, he's one of their own," Murphy says. "It doesn't sound like he has an immediate need to play in the Champions League. He feels he will get that at Tottenham if he stays patient. It wouldn't surprise me to see Harry Kane wearing a Tottenham shirt in ten years."

With this most unpredictable Premier League title race in a decade, the FA Cup could easily become a sideshow.

But then, there's a neat symmetry in our oldest competition confirming our newest heroes. JAMES GILL

P The Hunger Games: Catching Fire

Saturday 9.00pm C4

BACK TO THE Future mostly takes place in the past, ironically. But when Marty McFly visits the future – specifically, 2015 – in Back to the Future II, it all seems rather good fun. The clothes are colourful. Skateboards and cars hover. Images on advertising hoardings move. Food cooks instantly. And a holographic shark advertises Jaws 19 at the Holomax cinema, with the satirical tagline, “This time it’s really, really personal.” It’s important to note that the film was made in 1989, when, at the end of the Cold War, the future looked bright.

Of course, by the time we actually reached 2015, cinema’s vision of things to come had somewhat curdled. The Hunger Games saga reached its conclusion with Mockingjay Part 2, depicting America in ruins and the poor forced to fight to the death for the entertainment of the rich. The Hunger Games films (whose second chapter Catching Fire premieres on C4 this week) have taken $2.8 billion, largely thanks to a young adult audience – the first generation predicted to do worse financially than their parents, they can be forgiven for feeling despondent.

The Divergent series, also based on books, is up to two films now, set in a factional, post-apocalyptic world, as is The Maze Runner, in which teens negotiate a vast maze as part of some grim experiment. In a more adult vein, Fury Road saw the return of Aussie battler Mad Max last year, still scrapping for gasoline with other ragtag survivors of a nuclear holocaust.

And that was hot on the heels of the even bleaker Aussie dustscape in The Rover, set ten years after the end of the world. Meanwhile the terrifying Purge films, set in 2022, present America as a totalitarian state, in which society runs amok for one night a year to let off steam.

But this Christmas, into the morass of broken societies, feral brutality and doomsday thinking sailed Star Wars Episode VII: the Force Awakens. A battle of good versus evil with things blowing up in space, yes, but also good, clean and largely bloodless fun, with larky banter and comedic droids. Harking gloriously back to the first trilogy, the reawakened franchise seems to yell in the face of sci-fi, “Cheer up! It might never happen!”

A WELCOME ANTIDOTE TO dystopian fantasy, Star Wars is – crucially – set not in the future but “long ago”, rooted in classical mythology as much as in allegorical anxieties about the present. It’s escapism in its purest form: grown people cheered at the opening bars of the theme tune and the first glimpse of a particular spaceship. Perhaps, with the world in a frankly parlous state, it’s time science fiction gave us – to borrow a phrase – new hope.

When George Lucas unveiled his ambitious space opera in 1977, sci-fi was not the blockbusting genre it would become. After a first flush of success in the 1950s, where flying saucers and space travel were postwar obsessions, sci-fi fell into an ominous funk in the 60s, with its biggest hit, Planet of the Apes, decidedly pessimistic about the human race’s chances and 2001: a

Space Odyssey a cautionary tale of intelligent machines. In the early 70s, Logan’s Run, Silent Running and Westworld sent back distress signals from the future.

But Star Wars and Steven Spielberg’s wide-eyed fable Close Encounters redrew the map to the stars, paving the way for Spielberg’s ET to touch hearts around the world. All huge hits, they kicked off a boom in optimistic sci-fi. Star Trek boldly transferred to cinema in 1979 and the likes of Battlestar Galactica aped the great originals. In 1980 we had Flash Gordon, a camp classic with a Queen soundtrack. What fun it was.

But in the mid-80s, The Terminator changed the mood, while President Ronald Reagan turned "Star Wars" into a missile defence system. The lights seemed to go out on sci-fi, with the end of the millennium causing us to look backwards and dream wistfully of a simpler epoch.

In the 21st century, even sunny Spielberg got in on the dystopian act with Minority Report, Battlestar Galactica was reimagined somewhat more solemnly for TV, and the Dark Knight trilogy sucked the colour out of superheroes. Although a space movie like Interstellar offers inter-planetary hope, it's still a distress signal from a dying planet.

The Star Wars juggernaut is set to fill the skies for many years to come, with its bleeping robots and booming fanfares. So it might soon be safe to go back to the future again.

The apocalypse? We get enough of that at home.

P Selma

Friday 10.00pm Sky Premiere

The leading characters in this compelling film are Martin Luther King and his wife Coretta, Lyndon B Johnson and Governor George Wallace of Alabama, and the subject is the now famous civil rights march from Selma, Alabama, to the state capital Montgomery in 1965.

Quintessentially American, right?

Yet all those leading characters are played – very well, too – by British actors. Whatever that tells us about the depth of quality among performers here and in the USA, it's something we should rightly take pride in.

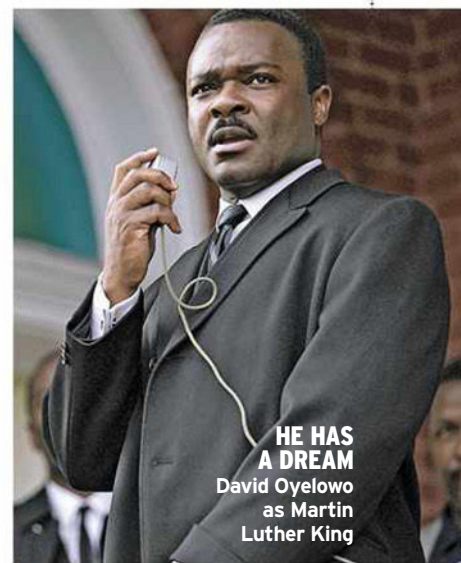

The star of the piece is David Oyelowo, who plays King with absolute conviction. The story begins in 1964 when King received his Nobel Peace Prize and a black woman in Alabama (Oprah Winfrey), though entitled to vote, was denied the right to do so by a white racist.

The indignant King asks LBJ (Tom Wilkinson) to pass the Voting Rights Act on behalf of black people. LBJ says he has more important things to do, whereupon the action moves to Selma where a peaceful demonstration is attacked by the police and King is arrested.

Thus begins the build-up to the march but, meanwhile, there are murky goings-on behind the scenes for King to contend with. George Wallace (Tim Roth) is deeply opposed to civil rights, especially in Alabama, while J Edgar Hoover (Dylan Baker), director of the FBI, thinks King is "a political and moral degenerate". So he seeks to destroy the man's credibility by making Coretta (Carmen Ejogo) believe that he is a womaniser.

Undeterred, King and his followers carry on planning the march, which eventually turned into three marches.

The first ended in Selma itself when Alabama state troopers attacked the unarmed demonstrators with tear gas, clubs and other weapons. King, influenced by LBJ and anxious to avoid a repetition of the previous violence, halted the second, again in Selma. Nevertheless, with white sympathisers arriving to support the marchers, there was still violence within the town.

But the third march, triumphantly, went ahead with presidential approval and history was made. This is a fascinating, sometimes brutal, story which, bearing in mind the amount of white on black violence that still goes on in America, has strong relevance even now.

The director, Ava DuVernay, is American and so are most of the cast. But the screenwriter, Paul Webb, is British and given that Selma is about a significant part of America's political history, it's difficult to understand why he and the leading British players were chosen. Could it simply be that they were cheaper than their American counterparts? If so, the makers certainly got their money's worth, especially with Oyelowo who, in my view, should have been nominated for both an Oscar and a Bafta but surprisingly wasn't.

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

P Sex and the City 2 ★★

10.35pm-1.15am ITV

DID YOU KNOW?
Plans to shoot scenes in Abu Dhabi were foiled because the government there condemned the film as "too sexual"

COMEDY Sex and the City 2 isn't a patch on the first Sex and the City movie, which wasn't a patch on the HBO TV series that ran from 1998 to 2004. But fans of the brand (and brands in general) may find it an undemanding, nostalgic night in. Three of the four friends are married: Carrie (Sarah Jessica Parker), Miranda (Cynthia Nixon) and Charlotte (Kristin Davis), while the eldest, Samantha (Kim Cattrall), faces menopause with typically forthright resistance. Her interview for a PR job with an Arab sheikh provides the girls-only location shift to Abu Dhabi, leaving behind inconvenient spouses and offspring. It's all a bit forced, with romantic obstacles visible a mile off (a sexy nanny... a manservant... Aiden...) and the culture-clash gags are unsubtle. But it's written and directed by stalwart Michael Patrick King and it feels in places like a special edition of the show. When I saw it at the cinema, my appreciation was enhanced by special champagne cocktails being served. Try it, girlfriends. (US 2010, swearing, sex scenes, sexual references)

DAYTIME

The Importance of Being Earnest ★★★★★ 8.40-10.10am BBC2

COMEDY Sumptuously shot, this adaptation of Oscar Wilde's sparkling comedy of errors benefits from the steady direction of Anthony Asquith who keeps Wilde's polished barbs and bons mots to the fore. The film also boasts an expert cast: Michael Redgrave and Michael Denison are clipped and composed as the gentlemen of leisure, whose innocent deceptions imperil their romantic aspirations towards Joan Greenwood and Dorothy Tutin. Upstaging them all is Dame Edith Evans as Lady Bracknell, whose quavering delivery of "A handbag" is one of British cinema's great moments. DP (UK 1952)

Sunflower ★★

12 noon-2.00pm Sky Arts

DRAMA Co-writer Cesare Zavattini and director Vittorio De Sica were two of the key figures in the neorealist movement that dominated Italian cinema in the postwar era. But there is little evidence of their humanism in this preposterous nonsense in which Sophia Loren goes to the USSR in search of missing husband Marcello Mastroianni only to find him married to Lyudmila Savelyeva. It gets worse when he recovers his memory and heads for Italy, where a rude shock awaits him. DP (It/Fr 1969)

Nanny McPhee ★★★★★ 3.45-5.45pm ITV2

FANTASY Written by and starring Emma Thompson (from Christianna Brand's Nurse Matilda books), this is the story of seven Victorian youngsters disciplined by the comically ugly Nanny McPhee. She is like an updated Mary Poppins, turning her charges' antics against them in darkly amusing style. Though the over-tens might find the feature a tad twee, younger viewers will love its imaginative mayhem and mischievous dialogue. Stylistically, too, the movie is delightful, with an exaggerated fairy-tale look that complements the deliberately pantomimic performances. The sequel is on tomorrow. SF (UK/US/Fr 2005, HD)

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★★★★

9.00-11.50pm C4

ADVENTURE There's not a dull stretch despite an elongated running time in this second instalment of the dystopian fantasy trilogy. Noble games victor Jennifer Lawrence is now a beacon of hope for rebellion against the rich of the Capitol. So President Donald Sutherland forces her back to the arena to fight other, more experienced winners. Everything is bolder, bigger and better. The tropical combat zone is a thrilling tangle of exciting traps and plot twists, and the designer fashion is higher than before, with a terrific Lawrence as its catwalk Cleopatra. AJ (US 2013, some violence, swearing, HD)

EVENING

Shrek the Third ★★★

9.05-10.30pm BBC3

COMEDY The breathtakingly innovative wit of the earlier films may be lacking, yet there's still plenty to enjoy in this third outing for the grumpy green ogre voiced by Mike Myers. There's Eddie Murphy and Antonio Banderas's manic double act as Donkey and Puss-in-Boots and some sly, "Once upon a time" in-jokes. But in keeping with the film's less certain direction, entertaining scenes of adorably cheeky baby ogres are upstaged by a mirthless human teenager (Justin Timberlake), who appears to have been brainstormed by marketing suits eager to extend their audience demographics. JR (US 2007, HD)

The Human Centipede II (Full Sequence) ★★★

10.55pm-12.40am Horror Channel

HORROR Director Tom Six's even more controversial sequel to The Human Centipede (First Sequence) is dark, graphic and gory as it shifts effortlessly between a study in twisted psychosis and barbed sardonic satire. Laurence R Harvey becomes fixated by the first film, so decides to craft his own 12-segment creature. Without surgical expertise, he makes do with staples, duct tape and dodgy DIY skills that initiate startling sexual violence, toolbox dentistry and mutilation. It's shot mostly in black and white, which makes it even more unsettling – if that's possible. AJ (Neth/UK/US 2011, violence, BW/col)

LATE NIGHT

The Day the Earth Stood Still ★★

11.50pm-1.45am C4

SCI-FI Fifty-seven years on, a fatuous remake of Robert Wise's alien-invasion film ditches the Cold War/religious subtext – and even the flying saucers – to deliver a contemporary allegory, as spaceman Keanu Reeves arrives with a warning for humanity. At his best when dealing with the CGI-heavy action, director Scott Derrickson fumbles the plotting from the moment Reeves escapes from government custody. JR (US 2008, violence, HD)

The Peacemaker ★★★ 12 midnight-1.55am BBC1 (Scotland: 1.20-3.15am)

THRILLER George Clooney and Nicole Kidman try to save Manhattan from destruction in this pacey thriller from director Mimi Leder. The stage is set for a nail-biting countdown to disarm a nuclear device. Kidman isn't entirely convincing as a scientist, but Clooney's confident turn as a Special Ops officer helped his transition from small-screen idol to international movie star. The first film to be released by DreamWorks SKG – the studio founded by Steven Spielberg, Jeffrey Katzenberg and David Geffen – this failed to ignite at the box office. But action fans will enjoy the irresistible combination of explosions, car crashes and shots of the ticking bomb. AT (US 1997, violence, swearing, HD)

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

Ice Age 4: Continental Drift ★★★
6.20-8.00pm C4

ADVENTURE We have to wait until the summer for Ice Age 5, so in the meantime let's see how those wizards at Blue Sky animation (who also make the irresistible Rio) stretched the Palaeolithic franchise for part four. It drifted away from ice in 3, with a shoehorned-in subterranean dinosaur adventure, and here, the sloth (voiced by John Leguizamo), mammoth (Ray Romano) and sabre-tooth (Denis Leary) are sent asunder after the squirrel Scrat causes the landmass to break up. Our heroes must rescue Manny (Romano) by setting treacherous sail on a block of ice. Game of Thrones star Peter Dinklage voices a primate pirate whose ship's mate (Jennifer Lopez) provides purring love interest for Leary's tiger. The wisecracks come thick, the action fast, and although 3D was too slavishly served for the big screen, it retains the manic energy of the series and provides fun cameos for Wanda Sykes, Nick Frost and Aziz Ansari (TV's Parks & Recreation). The narwhals are great, too. (US 2012, HD)

DAYTIME

The First Wives Club ★★★★★
2.35-4.35pm C5

COMEDY Olivia Goldsmith's bestselling novel is turned into a hilarious film by Police Academy director Hugh Wilson. Hollywood divas Goldie Hawn, Bette Midler and Diane Keaton give sparkling performances as three rich New Yorkers who are reunited by the suicide of an old schoolfriend, who killed herself after discovering her husband's infidelity. With their own partners running off with much younger women (including Sarah Jessica Parker and Showgirls star Elizabeth Berkley), the trio plot revenge, with Midler stealing the show from her two co-stars as the most deliciously vicious of them all. Terrific stuff. JB (US 1996, some swearing, HD)

EVENING

Star Trek: Generations ★★★★★
6.40-9.00pm C5

SCI-FI If you can stay with the multilayered, self-referential plot, this adventure builds up to warp speed for an exciting climax. It trades on nostalgia as the movie baton is passed from one Enterprise crew to the other. In the clever story, William Shatner and Patrick Stewart join forces to stop mad scientist Malcolm McDowell tapping into an intergalactic energy source. Stewart brings all his dignity to bear as the commander of the famous starship and almost single-handedly makes The Next Generation's transition from small to big screen an effective and winning one. AJ (US 1994, violence, some swearing, HD)

THRILLER A psychiatrist examines his own conscience in this hypnotic tale from director Steven Soderbergh. Jude Law plays the doctor treating Rooney Mara who descends into madness, partly as a result of pills prescribed by him. Mara's behaviour becomes increasingly erratic and when events take an even more tragic turn, he must consider whether he is at fault. Soderbergh highlights the flaws of psychiatry and the fatal self-absorption of the doctor/patient relationship in a smartly crafted story, briskly paced and suspenseful – until a crude payoff in the third act. A tease, on many levels. SP (US 2013, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

Puss in Boots ★★★★★
9.00-10.20pm BBC3

ADVENTURE The scene-stealing cat from Shrek 2 gets his own swashbuckler and it couldn't be a more colourful fairy tale. Here the dashing Puss (voiced by Antonio Banderas) finds romance with slinky Kitty Softpaws (Salma Hayek) as

DID YOU KNOW?
Jeremy Renner was set to voice Captain Gutt, but dropped out due to scheduling conflicts and was replaced by Peter Dinklage they team up with Humpty Dumpty (Zach Galifianakis) on a quest for a golden goose. Apart from being lovely to look at, this romp is cleverly written, veering delightfully between Mother Goose, Zorro and a Sergio Leone western. Everything from the hilarious dance fights to the swooping chases are superbly choreographed and consistently exciting. AJ (US 2011, HD)

The Taking of Pelham 123 ★★
9.00-11.05pm More4

THRILLER In this remake of the 1974 New York subway hijacking classic, a slightly ragged Denzel Washington fails to capture the weary sang-froid of the late, great Walter Matthau in the role of the subway train controller negotiating with a crazed hijacker, here played by John Travolta in full scenery-chewing mode. Director Tony Scott adds his trademark visual pyrotechnics but little else. Worse, Brian Helgeland's screenplay strips the irony and mordant wit of the original – in which the hostages were, if anything, even more unlikeable than the hostage-takers. AS (US/UK 2009, violence, swearing, HD)

LATE NIGHT

Signs ★★★★★ 11.25pm-1.05am BBC1
(Scotland: 12.35-2.10am)

FANTASY Here, writer/director M Night Shyamalan again deals with paranormal events from an intimate perspective. That he fails to pull it off entirely is owing to the enormity of the science-fiction backdrop – which sits uneasily with "meaningful" moments that feel awkward and manipulative. Where he does score highly is with the edgy atmosphere that builds up, as Mel Gibson's farmer discovers crop circles in his wheat field. Credible performances from Gibson and Joaquin Phoenix, as his brother, combine with a spooky ambience and effective, old-fashioned jolts. JC (US 2002, violence, some swearing)

Footloose ★★★
11.30pm-1.25am C4

DRAMA Essentially, this is a souped up Elvis Presley-style musical with free-spirited teenager Kevin Bacon fighting small-minded minister John Lithgow in a town where rock 'n' roll is illegal. Bacon, Lori Singer, Dianne Wiest, Chris Penn and Sarah Jessica Parker perform wonders with a story that often hits the drivel button. While Kenny Loggins may not be the first composer you'd think of to write songs for a rock musical, his tunes aren't half bad (the title track made the top ten in the UK charts), and the energy raised during the finger-snapping dance numbers is surprisingly infectious. AJ (US 1984, violence, swearing, drug abuse, brief nudity, HD)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★★★
11.30pm-1.00am BBC4

DOCUMENTARY This engrossing film charts the rise and fall of US property magnate David Siegel and his wife, Jackie, the "Queen" of the title, as their plans to build the largest private home in the country come crashing down around them. Having made billions from his timeshare business, David is hit by the 2008 economic crisis. Meanwhile, Jackie continues to spend. Director Lauren Greenfield followed the couple and their eight children for three years and her patience is rewarded here, as a tale of obscene wealth and lavish living becomes a perceptive study of the downside of the American Dream. It's hilarious and heartbreaking. TeS (US/Neth/UK/Den 2012, swearing, sexual references, HD)

Disconnect ★★★★★ 11.50pm-1.40am
BBC2 (not N Ireland/Wales)

DRAMA The internet age comes under the microscope in this portmanteau film that, inevitably, became dated as soon as it wrapped. Cyber-bullying, internet fraud and online porn all come under the spotlight, and, as is usual with multi-storyline projects, some strands are better than others (one involving a couple in pursuit of the man who stole their virtual identities is not only dull but wholly unrealistic). Still, there are insightful moments, and a section about a schoolboy who is hounded by bullies retains its relevance – just as the film, as a whole, reminds us of the necessity of old-fashioned human contact. DW (US 2012, swearing, sex scenes, HD)

The Watch ★★★

SCI-FI COMEDY The words "sci-fi comedy" do not auger well. For every Ghost Busters or Galaxy Quest, there's an Alien Autopsy or a Bicentennial Man. The Watch, co-written by Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg, starts out like a terrestrial social comedy but soon mutates. Concerned citizen Ben Stiller forms a neighbourhood watch group in a small Ohio town and recruits three other losers: Vince Vaughn, Jonah Hill and Richard Ayoade. They run over an alien and discover that a full Body Snatchers-style invasion is under way, at which point we bumpily shift gear. The frat-boy humour is beneath its principal cast – the aliens' brains are literally between their legs – but a showdown in Costco is passably exciting. Thank goodness for the very funny Ayoade. (US 2012, violence, swearing, sex scenes, HD)

WAR In this well-made re-enactment of one of the most significant conflicts of the war in the Pacific, John Wayne leads the charge. It was made cheaply, often shows its age and is very anti-Japanese. But it's still eminently watchable and it got the Duke his first Oscar nomination. Apparently, Kirk Douglas had been in line for the role, but, the producer said, Wayne wanted the role so badly "he could taste it". If you believe Wayne's son, though, the Duke worried about the script and war veterans lobbied him to play the part. AT (US 1949, BW)

COMEDY Though it shares the same title and basic premise as the cheesy 1980s TV show, there's not much else that this update has in common with the series that rocketed Johnny Depp to stardom. Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill are more dimwitted as the cops sent back to school to root out a drugs ring because, while the series aspired to serious drama, this is played strictly for laughs. Hill is a lot of fun as the nerd, but it's Tatum who really shines as the jock cop target of numerous jokes about how he looks far too old to be in high school. AS (US 2012, violence, sex scenes, drug abuse, edited for language, HD)

The Jane Austen Book Club ★★★

9.00-11.15pm Sony Entertainment TV

ROMANCE Writer/director Robin Swicord follows the members of a book group who find their relationship woes echoed in Jane Austen's novels. Maria Bello mirrors Emma, trying to fix up her pal (Amy Brenneman) while Hugh Dancy plays the hapless suitor caught between them. Emily Blunt has the toughest task, blending comedy and pathos as a teacher whose gothic state of mind makes her feel as if she's stuck in Northanger Abbey. Engaging performances and witty dialogue make up for the contrivances of the plot and Swicord does successfully show how Austen's observations are still relevant to the modern woman. SP (US 2007)

THRILLER Hotshot lawyer Richard Gere fronts this enjoyable courtroom drama from director Gregory Hoblit, based on William Diehl's bestselling novel. When he takes on the high-profile case of an altar boy (Edward Norton) accused of murder, his life unravels. Having squared up to a state prosecutor (Laura Linney) who just happens to be his ex, Gere begins to suspect that his client is not the angel he seems. The film brims with humour and excitement, while scenes between Gere and the Oscar-nominated Norton crackle with energy. AJ (US 1996, may be edited for language, violence, a sex scene, brief nudity, HD)

Ransom ★★★

18

THRILLER In this entertaining remake of a 1956 Glenn Ford thriller, Mel Gibson stars as a tycoon who must decide whether to pay a $2 million ransom for his kidnapped son or take the law into his own hands. There are no prizes for guessing the road Gibson takes, but his method of action is an interesting one. The film suffers overall under Ron Howard's unusually starchy direction and Rene Russo is wasted as Gibson's concerned wife, but Gary Sinise gives his villainous Terminator-like role a few wry twists. Lower your expectations and this overplayed urban combat drama will reward with a few tense moments. AJ (US 1996, violence, swearing, drug abuse, HD)

●●● Sherlock Holmes ★★★★★
9.00-11.30pm Sky1

MYSTERY THRILLER Eclipsed by Steven Moffat and Mark Gatiss's beloved BBC incarnation with Benedict Cumberbatch in the title role, Guy Ritchie's funkily irreverent steampunk reboot of Sherlock Holmes can at least claim to have got in first. Robert Downey Jr is such a charismatic actor he gets away with it – and the English accent – as a sort of Zen, bare-knuckle fighting bohemian, grounded by Jude Law's more traditional Watson and Rachel McAdams as Irene Adler. Although it's set in London in 1891, with a highwire scene atop Tower Bridge, it's filmed (and scored, by Hans Zimmer) in a very contemporary way. Mark Strong brings a touch of evil as a serial killing lord. (Ger/US/Aus 2009, HD)

7.05-9.10pm Talking Pictures TV
(Freeview HD 81, Sky 343) PG

DRAMA Without breaking free of its theatrical origins, this propagandist allegory nevertheless succeeds in being haunting, mournful and inspiring. As the writer disillusioned by the world's slow response to fascism, Michael Redgrave gives one of his most complex and tormented performances, as he regains the crusading spirit from his encounters with the victims of a shipwreck that occurred years before on the rocks near the lighthouse he now tends. With a bullish contribution from James Mason and truly touching support from ghostly émigrée Lilli Palmer, this is a fine achievement. DP (UK 1942, BW)

●●● Home Alone ★★★★★
8.00-10.05pm E4 PG

COMEDY This modest Christmas caper was one of the highest grossing pictures of all time. Writer/producer John Hughes and director Chris Columbus tuned in to the joyfulness of children triumphing over adults, and the chaos of Tom and Jerry cartoons. Macaulay Culkin, then ten years old, plays the kid left stranded by his parents who fly to Paris for the holidays. He binges on junk food and videos then copes heroically with two burglars (Joe Pesci and Daniel Stern), crying "Yes!" when he zaps them. Surprisingly violent in a cartoon-like way, it captured the heart and the wickedness of children everywhere. AT (US 1990, violence, swearing, HD)

Quantum of Solace ★★★
9.00-11.10pm ITV2 12

SPY Daniel Craig remains eminently watchable as James Bond even if his second outing doesn't quite live up to Casino Royale. Picking up directly after that film, it sees him looking for answers after the death of his lover, Vesper Lynd. Director Marc Forster had to deal with a writer's strike during the making and the script suffers as a result, but viewed solely as an action spectacle, there's still lots of excitement, not least a close-up, shaky-cam fight in a hotel and an artfully staged gun fight at the opera. JH (UK/US 2008, violence, HD)

Melancholia ★★★★★

10.00pm-12.40am Sky Arts 15

SCI-FI An operatic meditation on the apocalypse from Danish auteur Lars von Trier. The wedding of Kirsten Dunst and Alexander Skarsgård descends into chaos when her mental illness asserts itself, just as a rogue planet is revealed to be on a collision course with Earth (a metaphor for depression). Von Trier mines trenchant symbolism from prophetic nightmares and portents. Never mind Armageddon and 2012, this is a cerebral kind of disaster movie with imagery and themes that prove harder to shake. AC (Den/Swe/Fr/Ger/It 2011, nudity, HD)

THRILLER England, 2027, is a dirty dystopia in which humanity has become infertile – except that Clive Owen gets a surprise visit from an ex-lover (Julianne Moore) who offers small hope. Director Alfonso Cuarón delivers a startling take on PD James's downbeat novel, reworking its themes for the post-9/11 era. Owen is excellent and there's great support from Michael Caine, too. But it's Cuarón who lifts it up, creating nerve-shredding action in unbroken shots. Jamie Russell (US/UK 2006, violence, swearing, drug abuse, nudity, HD)

The Mark of Zorro ★★★★★
11.15am-1.05pm More4 U

ADVENTURE A wonderful definitive adaptation of the great romantic legend, with matinée idol Tyrone Power as the swashbuckling Don Diego Vega. Basil Rathbone makes a superb villain and the swordfights are terrific. The only trouble is that on TV at the slightly faster speed you can tell that they're faked. THRILLER In what used to be called America, two young people are forced to fight to the death for TV ratings. One of them is the magnetic Jennifer Lawrence who, as Katniss, shows an iron will to survive. Despite well-worn ideas, director Gary Ross keeps the film vivid and relevant, the camerawork jittery and involving, and the action pacy. The dystopian design is also inspired in a surprisingly serious franchise start-up that will please fans of the books and newcomers alike. AJ (US 2012, violence, HD)

The Woman on the Beach ★★★★★
10.05-11.35am Movies4Men

FILM NOIR French film-maker Jean Renoir regarded his seven years in America as wasted time. Yet, in spite of cuts ordered by studio bosses at RKO, there is no denying the quality of his parting shot to Hollywood. Joan Bennett, in the title role, reinforced the reputation she forged in such Fritz Lang features as The Woman in the Window and Scarlet Street as one of film noir's finest femmes fatales, and her highly charged interaction with blind husband Charles Bickford and lifeguard Robert Ryan produces a smouldering drama that never relaxes its grip. DP (US 1947, BW)

●●● Iron Man ★★★★★
8.00-10.30pm E4 12

ADVENTURE In an exemplary piece of casting, Robert Downey Jr (see left) stars as weapons genius Tony Stark, who is held hostage in Afghanistan. His captors order him to build a bomb, but instead he devises an armoured suit that he uses to escape. Back in America, Stark decides to use his invention for good (rather than profit), aided by his loyal, wise-cracking assistant (Gwyneth Paltrow). Director Jon Favreau cleverly filters the comic's 1960s origins through contemporary "War on Terror" paranoia. Alongside that, the futuristic gadgets and stratospheric flights are great fun. AJ (US 2008, violence, swearing, HD)

Hummingbird ★★
9.00-11.05pm 5★ 15

THRILLER An ex-soldier fleeing a court martial goes to ground in London in this Jason Statham vehicle. The underworld – and a spot of vengeance – beckon and, needless to say, Statham biffs a few villains en route. But he also proves he can convince as a troubled individual. Curiously, his performance is about the most believable thing in a film that stretches credibility beyond breaking point with a romantic subplot involving Agata Buzek's charitable East European nun. Evidently, Knight's intention is to weave a modern Dickensian fable, but the story takes too many liberties. TJ (UK/US 2013, violence, swearing, sexual references)

Thunderball ★★★★★
11.10pm-1.25am ITV PG

SPY The Bond series went well and truly comic strip with this gadget-filled extravaganza that too often cuts plotline corners to squeeze in all the hi-tech hardware. Playing 007 for the fourth time, Sean Connery is still getting a kick out of the role, but he's less the suave spy and more the man of action here than in previous outings. Adolfo Celi makes a worthy opponent, but Claudine Auger is one of the least memorable Bond girls. Director Terence Young never quite solves the pacing problems posed by filming underwater, but John Stears's Oscar-winning special effects more than compensate. DP (UK 1965, may be edited for violence, HD)

I am Lis and my husband no longer asks me to turn the TV down.

Life's better when you hear better.

"I first noticed the signs of hearing loss when I was struggling to hear my husband - I just thought he was mumbling. Then it was the TV - my husband would say it's too loud. We would turn it down and I could still hear it, but I couldn't quite catch it - it was clarity more than anything. My hearing loss became quite isolating.

"Since I have had my hearing aids from Amplifon my confidence has improved and the embarrassment has gone. I can't stress how much they have improved my life!"

COMEDY This delightful spoof western marked James Stewart's debut in the genre and revived the then flagging career of Marlene Dietrich. Son of a famous lawman, Destry (Stewart) is called in as deputy sheriff to clean up the town of Bottleneck, which is run by crooked Brian Donlevy. Dance-hall queen Dietrich is Donlevy's girlfriend. Everyone expects Destry to be as tough as his dad but instead he's a pacifist who refuses to wear a gun and talks his way out of trouble with cracker-barrel philosophy. Not unexpectedly Dietrich, as the traditional tart with a heart, falls for him and what happens then, before and after Stewart reluctantly reaches for his six-shooter, is best for you to find out. In a very entertaining film that combines comedy with genuine emotion and tension, there are a couple of outstanding moments: a catfight between Dietrich and a wrongly suspicious wife, Una Merkel, and Dietrich singing See What the Boys in the Back Room Will Have. THRILLER DJ Caruso and Shia LaBeouf, the director and star of Disturbia, team up again for this fast and furious conspiracy thriller. In a Hitchcockian tale of ordinary people caught up in extraordinary situations, LaBeouf plays a slacker who, along with single mother Michelle Monaghan, is contacted by a mysterious female voice at the end of a phone line. The pair are framed as terrorists, and must do as the voice commands in order to survive. The film is well-played, with a paranoid, 1970s sensibility, and this, along with moments of heart-pounding suspense and impressive stunt work, makes it a stylish and often awe-inspiring thrill ride. AJ (US/Ger/UK 2008, swearing, some violence, HD)

THRILLER Along with the Bond movies, films based on the novels of Alistair MacLean are the precursors of the all-action blockbusters that kick-started the careers of many 1980s Hollywood musclemen. If Bruce Willis or Sylvester Stallone had taken the maverick agent role, audiences would have lapped it up. Unfortunately, director Geoffrey Reeve is saddled with Swedish actor Sven-Bertil Taube, whose charmless playing scuppers the film. However, the speedboat chase along the canals of Amsterdam (a sequence directed by Don Sharp) is thrilling. DP (UK 1970, violence, some swearing, drug abuse, nudity)

DRAMA This low-key story paints an elegant, deeply affecting portrait of a marriage in crisis. Based on a short story by David Constantine, it follows Kate (Charlotte Rampling) and Geoff (Tom Courtenay), a retired couple who are one week away from their 45th wedding anniversary.

As the party approaches, Geoff discovers that the Swiss authorities have found the body of his previous girlfriend, Katya, who fell to her death while hiking 50 years previously. Kate tries to be supportive, but she is gradually consumed by doubt and resentment, as a series of revelations alter her perception of Geoff.

This gives rise to compelling sequences, which are beautifully directed and wonderfully acted, with Rampling and Courtenay utterly convincing as people who have been together for a long time. Their exquisite performances, create an insightful, heartbreaking film. Stephen Carty (UK 2015, swearing, sex scene, HD)

Love & Mercy ★★★★★ 12 Available on DVD, Blu-ray and download

This uneven biopic focuses on two periods in the life of Brian Wilson, the singer/songwriter who co-founded the Beach Boys. Half the film takes place in the 1960s, and follows Brian (Paul Dano) as he tries to take the band in a new direction. The other half is set in the 1980s, when Brian (John Cusack) has become a fragile, overly medicated man-child whose life is being micro-managed by a manipulative psychotherapist (Paul Giamatti). Each strand rings false in different ways. Dano features in the most effective sequences but neither he nor Cusack is able to quite disappear into the role. A fascinating biopic could be made about Brian Wilson, but this isn't it. The DVD includes a commentary by director Bill Pohlad and co-writer Oren Moverman, a making of featurette and deleted scenes. Stephen Carty

Pick your winner!

It's been a great year for women, says Alison Graham

When Suranne Jones, as wronged GP Gemma Foster, roared, "I'm a wolf tonight!" as she torpedoed the most jaw-dropping dinner party, I thought, "Ah yes, now there's an award-winner." Jones has, with a series of interesting drama choices (Unforgiven, Scott & Bailey), worked her way from Coronation Street vixen to a place in the marble halls of the Best of British acting talent. Quite rightly, for Doctor Foster, her name leaps from the nominations for this year's National Television Awards.

Though Mike Bartlett's taut domestic drama had its faults – its wheels spun for a couple of episodes as it decided where to go – Jones, as a scorned woman, wronged by her charming husband, towered in every scene. Doctor Foster itself is up for the best new drama award.

2015 was the year women stole the show in dramas; Sheridan Smith – who won last year for Cilla – is up against Jones for best drama performance. In Black Work she was a widowed police officer who found a new secret side to her dead husband.

But for talked-about drama that seeped into the national consciousness we must look to Poldark, which is nominated in the new drama category, with star Aidan Turner (who played broody, moody, occasionally disrobing copper miner Ross Poldark) up for best drama performance – up against Jones and Smith and also David Tennant as tormented detective Alec Hardy in the second series of Broadchurch.

Poldark made a true star of Turner, seen most recently in the BBC1 Christmas adaptation of Agatha Christie's And Then There Were None, while writer Debbie Horsfield adapted Winston Graham's books with verve, freshness and skill.

But last year wasn't just the year of the blockbuster drama, it was the year that The Great British Bake Off became an absolute roaring beast of a success, ending up the most-watched show of the year with more than 15 million viewers. Just when you thought that it couldn't get any bigger, it did, remaining a cultural force and a haven of kindness, good manners and fun, thanks largely to presenters Mel Giedroyc and Sue Perkins, deservedly nominated for best TV presenter. (Surely it can't go to Ant and Dec again?)

'2015 was the year women stole the show in dramas'

Bake Off champion Nadiya Hussain brightened us all with her energy and fun. Even Mary Berry shed a tear when Nadiya received the trophy as her delighted young children whooped for joy.

Oddly, Bake Off is up against Bear Grylls: Mission Survive in the challenge show category (could Bear bake a victoria sponge out of leaves and insects in the middle of nowhere... now that I'd like to see), and the more mainstream MasterChef and The Apprentice.

Controversy around winning act Jules O'Dwyer and her dog Matisse hasn't kept Britain's Got Talent out of the talent show line-up (with Strictly, The Voice UK and The X Factor), while Peter Kay's warm-hearted Car Share gets a nod in the comedy category.

The NTAs are decided entirely by you, the viewers, so it's time to make your feelings known. The ceremony, hosted by Dermot O'Leary, comes from The O2 London on ITV on Wednesday 20 January.

This Scandi saga raised the stakes in cop dramas

Dramas that employ an intriguing gimmick are gambling with our trust. What happens when that premise goes stale? What else you got?

When murder drama The Bridge arrived on BBC4 in April 2012, it had a lot to live up to. We'd loved Borgen, and thrilled to The Killing. Surely there wasn't a third Scandi classic out there? The Bridge also bore two gimmicks: it began with a body on the Sweden/Denmark border, so the chalk-and-cheese cops were different nationalities; and the Swede was Saga, an intense leather-trousered blonde whose lack of empathy was beyond any other maverick sleuth. Was she... autistic?

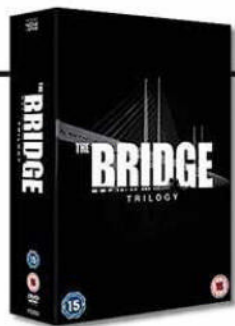

Looking now at three masterful seasons, each more absorbing than the last, all that's melted away. Sofia Helin wrings every drop of comedy out of a woman with no social graces, but her partnership with Kim Bodnia's Martin, the shambling Dane who is big-hearted to a fault, quickly develops into a nuanced and, for people who applied that glib "autistic" label, humbling portrait of a woman who is simply wired differently. The way her inability to lie impacts on season one's devastating climax confirms her quirks are no cheap ruse.

Anyway, within half an episode, The Bridge's plotting is all you can think about. No show is better at adding strands to a case and keeping hold of them, or at ending each episode on a trembling cliffhanger.

Last year's third and perhaps last season was The Bridge's greatest triumph over viewer scepticism. Bodnia had left, so Helin started again with Thure Lindhardt as Saga's new partner, Henrik. The writers sold us a double dummy about him, while deepening Saga's back story and spinning a maddening puzzle around a series of artful killings. This superlative thriller keeps raising the stakes, and winning. JACK SEALE

How to keep your phone alive

Batteries are the biggest problem in tech. What can you do to keep going? After a few hundred charges, your phone battery will simply not last as long. One answer is to replace it, but be careful and only buy from officially sanctioned dealers. Low-quality batteries from unscrupulous manufacturers can cause fires and even explosions.

Apple users can't replace the battery in their tablet, phone or laptop themselves. iPhone 6 owners can now spend £79 on a "Smart" case that has an extra battery built in: critics instantly called it an admission that the company has a problem with battery life – just include that better battery in the phone! – and dubbed it "the Hump" on account of its unwieldy design. But it does the job.

It's not all bad news for Apple users. A recent iOS update enables a "low power mode", which turns off background processes like checking email when charge is low.

Everyone can take steps when you dip into the red: turn down screen brightness, turn off wi-fi and Bluetooth when you don't need them, stop doing battery-intensive things like playing games or streaming video, and quit battery-hogging apps. You can see these in your settings, but the big culprits tend to be Facebook, Spotify and Snapchat. JONATHAN HOLMES

JUDGES LIKE TO PARTY
Series stalwarts Ricky Wilson and Will.i.am are joined by Paloma Faith and Boy George

PICK OF THE DAY The Voice UK 7.30pm BBC1

ENTERTAINMENT So we've just got over the pre-Christmas excitement of Louisa Johnson winning The X Factor (what do you mean you didn't notice?) when The Voice suddenly returns. And, you surely must have noticed this, there are two new judges perched on the big red chairs this time.

Tom Jones left under somewhat acrimonious circumstances while Rita Ora defected to Simon Cowell and The Other Side. In their places are Paloma Faith and Boy George. He has apparently nicknamed her Palaver and called her "bitchy" and "rude" after she pretended to fall asleep when he was pitching for a singer they both wanted to join their team.

So it sounds as though we're in for some sparky exchanges – which will be good when we've reached the less exciting post-spinning-chairs phase. One thing we can rely on is that Ricky Wilson will be Mr Nice Guy and Will.i.am will shine with the dope wordplay. JANE RACKHAM

ENTERTAINMENT The magic clip series is back. If you've seen it before, you'll know it's not clever, not exactly highbrow, and half the time the tricks don't work (a section of the show is called It Worked in Rehearsal). But it does offer simple pleasures, such as seeing a Brazilian taxi that splits in two when the driver starts off, leaving the passenger on a suddenly exposed back seat. One woman's hysterical reaction is, for some reason, infectious – sign her up for Brazilian Gogglebox.

Elsewhere, Dynamo reads Sam Smith's mind, a US comic conjures a cruise ship out of the sea and a woman in a cage turns into a tiger. Like I say, simple pleasures.

Dad's Army

8.30pm BBC2

SITCOM Dad's Army didn't often do serious drama but when it did, the change of tone was noticeable. And this homage to Brief Encounter (co-writer David Croft's favourite episode) is a beauty. Initially, Arthur Lowe didn't like the script – in which the men go out of their way to accommodate women volunteers – but his actress wife Joan Cooper persuaded him of its virtues. Just as well: it's one of Lowe's finest hours.

The hearty laughs from the studio audience show how well loved the characters were by this stage (just two years into its nine-year run). There's some glorious myopic acting from Lowe, and Jones finally explaining why he's often out of step on parade.

DRAMA This week's long, rambling episode is brightened by the repercussions from Salvo's rash decision to ask Livia to marry him. He has to commit to twice-weekly meetings at the church and must field Mimi's desperate efforts to become his witness (the Sicilian equivalent of best man).

This prequel series, set in the 90s, knocks spots off the original version in terms of characterisation, music (every so often Palermo's Olivia Sellerio soars on the soundtrack) and in the persuasive romance between Salvo and Livia, surely one of TV's most handsome couples.

The latest investigation begins when they're sauntering on a beach at night and Livia spots the run-down Hotel Riviera ablaze. One guest has rushed back inside and pays with his life. Is this a case of arson for insurance purposes or could it somehow be linked to the local warring Mafia families?

New this weekend

Get Hard ★★★ 8.00pm Sky Premiere

Prison looms for Will Ferrell's millionaire in this broad comedy. Kevin Hart plays his "urban" partner in crime, except that he lies about doing time in jail, profiting from the white man's prejudice to take a lucrative job training the wealthy wimp to withstand the rigours of San Quentin. While director Etan Cohen's feature debut doesn't rank alongside Ferrell's quirkier comedies, his lead actors make for a spunky odd couple. STELLA PAPAMICHAEL

Last chance to see

Citizen Kane ★★★★★ BBC iPlayer

If you missed it on BBC4 last weekend, there's still time to watch this classic on catch up. Orson Welles was just 25 when he made the film and, unhindered by what had gone before, he proceeded to experiment with sound, camera angles and movement in a way few had even conceived of. He also turns in a magnificent performance as Kane, the press baron whose torrid life mirrored that of William Randolph Hearst. DAVID PARKINSON

That's ape-ertainment

Planet of the Apes ★★★★★

1.00pm Sky Sci-Fi/Horror Charlton Heston stars in this sci-fi gem as an astronaut who crashes on a planet where the apes rule and human beings are the dumb animals. Three of the sequels are also showing today, plus the latest in the rebooted series, Dawn of the Planet of the Apes. JEREMY ASPINALL

WAR STORIES
A far more terrible battle awaits the disillusioned Andrei (James Norton)

PICK OF THE DAY War and Peace 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA OF THE WEEK Watching this series feels like wrapping yourself in a great, thick embroidered blanket, or one of the lavish coats Prince Bolkonsky wears. The surfaces are seductive, God knows, but beneath the surface and the formalities of Russian high society, it keeps reminding us its characters, however distant, feel emotions exactly like ours: jealousy, grief, yearning, shame and fear are all on show as tonight's events unfold.

Jim Broadbent is in full sail as gruff old Bolkonsky, trying to hide his softer feelings in a house full of women. Silky schemer Prince Kuragin (Stephen Rea) pays him a call, hoping to pair his womanising son Anatole to the devout Marya, a match almost as ill-conceived as the one he arranged for Pierre.

But all that is in the "peace" column. In the "war" column, restless Andrei (James Norton) is still keen to prove himself a hero. Writing to his family on the eve of battle, he mutters, "And yet I'd give them all up for one moment of glory," and snuffs out his candle... DAVID BUTCHER

FA Cup Football

1.30pm BT Sport 2, 3.35pm BBC1

Chelsea v Scunthorpe United

(k/o 2pm BT Sport 2) It's still only January, but the FA Cup is Chelsea's best hope of silverware this season. Bradford City's upset last season was unprecedented. Now, being beaten at home is commonplace for the Blues, although losing to League One opposition would be a new low. Scunthorpe will love this shot at the league champs after beating Leyton Orient in their second-round replay.

Tottenham Hotspur v Leicester City (k/o 4pm BBC1) This all-Premier League affair rounds off the third-round weekend. A former player for both clubs, Gary Lineker will watch his successors Harry Kane and Jamie Vardy very closely. JAMES GILL

Beowulf: Return to the Shieldlands

7.00pm ITV

● DRAMA This mud-and-monsters fantasy hasn't quite found its feet. New characters are introduced as the leaders of other tribes converge on the settlement of Herot, where they are due to elect a new Yarl – leader of all Thanes in the Shieldlands. It ought to be Rheda, the potent widow played by Joanne Whalley, unless someone chooses to challenge her to a fight...

Whalley is the standout figure and she manages to give her character more heft and charisma than the dialogue deserves. Otherwise the story lacks narrative oomph – Beowulf hunts something called a Skinshifter tonight – but if it's hokey escapism you're after, jump in. DB

Still Open All Hours

7.30pm BBC1

SITCOM Still Open All Hours is one of those comedies that lasts just 30 minutes, yet by the end of the episode you swear you've lost three hours.

Maybe it's something to do with the leisurely/laboured comedy business and the well-signalled slapstick, tonight involving a gag with a vacuum cleaner that anyone born before 1960 could see coming from 30 miles away in a North Sea fog.

But never mind, a gentle, unexamined life potters on inside that corner shop on an unspecified street in an unspecified era, as wily owner Granville (David Jason) takes delivery of a parcel from North Korea and he tries to fix up hopeless Gastric with a date. ALISON GRAHAM

Antiques Roadshow

8.00pm BBC1

ANTIQUES One of the first items the experts see when the Roadshow returns to Bowood House in Wiltshire has a wonderful local connection. It's a framed JAK cartoon depicting the lions that escaped from a travelling circus and invaded Devizes School. Apparently (fortunately) there was only one victim – a cheese sandwich.

There are many other remarkable treasures including a set of illustrated playing cards from 1685, a slightly damaged Fabergé cigarette case and a late-19th-century carousel horse. The best reaction to a valuation comes from a woman with an autographed film script belonging to her mother. "I'm not giving it back to my mum now – I'm off!" she jokes. JANE RACKHAM

TV CV: DAVID HAREWOOD

■ Currently starring in Beowulf (7pm ITV), Birmingham-born actor David Harewood has made a name for himself on both sides of the pond. ■ He had hits in the US with Homeland, Supergirl and Karen Gillan's Selfie. ■ Best-known UK roles include a selfish tycoon in David Tennant's Doctor Who swansong, Tuck in Robin Hood and a crook in Criminal Justice. ■ And 2016 will see Harewood in The Night Manager, an adaptation of the John le Carré novel also starring Tom Hiddleston, Olivia Colman and Hugh Laurie.

Dragons' Den

8.00pm BBC2

REALITY Don't you love it when the tables are turned? When for once, it's the Dragons who are sweating? Tonight, there's a delicious bit of jostling and jousting as several of the armchair moguls make bids for a tasty business, and each tries to persuade the mild-mannered inventor to take their money.

At one point the needle between Touker Suleyman and Deborah Meaden gets heated when he dares to impugn her approach to business: talk to the hand, Touker.

Elsewhere, a man enters the den with a chicken under his arm looking for investment in his hard-boiled-egg business and a beauty-scrub entrepreneur addresses Peter Jones as "Man". DB

Walking the Himalayas

8.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY The explorer Levison Wood has an agonisingly close call tonight. The former paratrooper is now in the foothills of northern India, where he braves stampeding elephants, fearless monkeys and a cannibal monk, before some much needed pampering at a Hindu festival.

Then it's on to a very wet Nepal where a night in a national park crawling with leeches, crocodiles and tigers ends in a hasty getaway in the wee hours.

But the real horror happens when Wood is forced to flee violent local strikes and flags down a taxi – only for the brakes to fail. We don't see it hurtle down the cliff but we do hear the cries for help. CLAIRE WEBB

Deutschland 83

9.00pm C4

DRAMA Undercover East German soldier Martin Rauch, blackmailed by his spy-auntie into posing as the attaché to a West German military bigwig, finds trouble wherever he goes. At a conference between East and West he must plant a listening device, which seems straightforward but isn't. Then he must steal some top-secret papers, which gives him no end of bother.

Deutschland 83 is a capable Cold War adventure, Martin is a sympathetic hero, and the details are winning, such as the way he delights in his West German hotel's free toiletries and slippers. AG

Goya Exposed with Jake Chapman

10.00pm BBC4

ART Artist Jake Chapman is obsessed by Francisco Goya's gruesome series of etchings "The Disasters of War" – he and his brother Dinós have produced more than 500 works based on them. Here he explores the power of Goya's depictions of the brutality of the Peninsula War, and why the Spanish master can be called the first modern artist. His deconstructions are a bit pseud, but he's eloquent on why we shouldn't view Goya's violent imagery with an anti-war idealism – "It's just dead flesh." DAVID CRAWFORD

Endeavour

8.00pm ITV

DRAMA There are many strands to tonight's story – anti-apartheid protests, Green Shield Stamps, food contamination as blackmail and a deadly tea-making machine. Yes, it's all happening in 1960s Oxford now that Morse is back where he belongs.

The murder of a Jackson Pollock-ish artist leads Morse and his lugubrious boss Thursday to a hippy commune. The look on Thursday's face as he's greeted by a young woman flowerchild is an absolute picture. Fred's views on the permissive society are as trenchant and vivid as you'd expect: "Free love? In my experience it's the most expensive kind there is."

Besides, Fred (super Roger Allam) has no time for such nonsense when a young woman dies after a visit to a supermarket.

And Tony Hancock fans – pat yourselves on the back if you spot a "hidden" little in-joke reference to the Lad Himself. ALISON GRAHAM

Catch up with Coogan

Alan Partridge: Alpha Papa ★★★★★ BBC iPlayer
Steve Coogan's foot-in-mouth broadcaster finds himself embroiled as a mediator in a siege at his Norfolk radio station in this reassuringly modest feature outing. Alpha Papa eschews the high-concept, travelogue approach of other small-to-big-screen comedy characters, such as Mr Bean, and instead draws from Partridge's TV universe. The film brims with hilarious lines and is played with sharp comic timing by the cast. ANDREW COLLINS

A world of Payne

Sideways ★★★★★ 8.00pm Sky Select
This spot-on dissection of American social mores from Alexander Payne makes its return to Sky today. Paul Giamatti and Thomas Haden Church star as a pair of middle-aged mates who take a trip to California's wine country to celebrate Church's upcoming wedding. But Giamatti's plans get sidelined by his friend's attempts to have one last fling. It's showing tonight in a Payne double bill with the high-school satire Election. ALAN JONES

Inglourious inspiration

Counterfeit Commandos

3.10pm Movies4Men
You've heard of spaghetti westerns... well, this is an example of the "macaroni combat" genre, and one that also goes by the name Inglorious Bastards. Quentin Tarantino later borrowed the title, and gave director Enzo G Castellari a cameo in his film by way of thanks. JAMIE HEALY

FA Cup Football 1.30pm BT Sport 2 As if Chelsea didn't have enough problems, they've now got would-be giant-killers breathing down their necks as Scunthorpe United of League One visit Stamford Bridge for a third-round match. The Iron earned this plum tie with a 3-0 replay victory over Leyton Orient, with one of their goals scored by Jack King (pictured). Of course, the Blues should win this, but they'll be haunted by their fourth-round home defeat by Bradford City just under a year ago. STEVE WALL

SPOT THE DIFFERENCE
Tracey Ullman as Angela
Merkel – and, inset, the

PICK OF THE DAY Tracey Ullman's Show 10.45pm BBC1 (N Ireland: 11.15pm)

COMEDY OF THE WEEK New series Who knew that Judi Dench was an inveterate kleptomaniac, a hooligan who enjoys nothing more than destroying the property of her co-stars for the thrill of getting away with it? "But I am a national treasure," simpers the legendary actress who is, of course, Tracey Ullman in disguise.

The brilliant comedian/actress has returned home after three decades mainly spent in the US, and it is worth the wait. Her new sketch show imagines a dawn-to-dusk day in the life of her native country, and a lot happens: we meet Maggie Smith auditioning for a sci-fi show, a topless feminist MP and a staggeringly vain Angela Merkel on a trip to Britain discussing make-up and which world leaders fancy her with a gossip assistant. There's also Karen the drugs mule who arrives in Britain after 30 years in a Far East prison, which you can't help but feel is an allusion to Tracey's own return from exile.

It's fabulously funny, strikingly original and with a political tinge – no more so than the fabulous song and dance number set in a soon-to-be-closed Welsh library, which showcases this canny performer's extraordinary all-round talents. It's great to have her back. BEN DOWELL

Father Brown

1.45pm BBC1

DAYTIME CHOICE There are five more of these superior murder mysteries based on GK Chesterton's stories about the crime-solving priest to enjoy before Doctors returns next Monday.

Today, Mrs McCarthy (Sorcha Cusack) regrets accepting a lift from Lady Felicia (Nancy Carroll) after her sports car veers off the road into a tree. The women end up in adjoining beds at the cottage hospital. Meanwhile, at the presbytery, Father Brown (Mark Williams) and Sid's (Alex Price) newfound freedom is cut short by the arrival of the formidable Mrs Steele (Gillian Bevan) as parish secretary and suspicious news that a routine operation at the hospital has gone wrong. JANE RACKHAM

Great British Railway Journeys

6.30pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Michael Portillo, in a natty orange/red jacket, embarks on another week of brisk journeys, exploring the south coast from Dover to Lewes. Displaying the can-do attitude of the formidable Captain Matthew Webb, the first person to swim the English Channel, Portillo dons a wetsuit to join a ten-times Channel swimmer for a quick dip. A very quick dip, as the water is perishing cold. Portillo's voice leaps up to Lady Bracknell levels as he manages to utter a desperate "cold!" before returning to the support boat.

But he warms up before heading to Glyndebourne to try his hand at opera singing. ALISON GRAHAM

How to Lose Weight Well

HEALTH New series Surely everyone knows that by eating less and exercising more, you should lose weight? But there are a lot of different types of diets, so with the help of six overweight guinea pigs Dr Xander van Tulleken explores the most popular, and craziest, ones: the Beyoncé, the alkaline and the 5:2 fasting diets are all featured.

What makes this series really fun is that Van Tulleken has never shied away from a medical challenge. However, swallowing a double dose of fat-absorbing pills before scoffing a fat-drenched Indian meal was one of his messier experiments. JR

Immortal Egypt with Joann Fletcher

9.00pm BBC2

HISTORY Egyptologist Joann Fletcher surveys a charnel house of bones scattered throughout a warriors' tomb high in the cliffs above Deir El Bahri near Luxor. This grisly muddle is an apt metaphor for the period of Egyptian history she's discussing – from the end of the Pyramid age around 2350 BC to the start of the New Kingdom golden age some 800 years later.

This is a dark time of famine, insecurity and invasion, but there are glorious material goods to draw on for evidence. GILL CRAWFORD

THE WEEK IN SOAPLAND

EMMERDALE

Affairs don't stay secret for long in soapland and, sure enough, thanks to a mix-up with a mobile phone, Aaron (right) finds out what's going on between Paddy and Tess. But will he tell Rhona? Adam is stunned when he learns that Rakesh changed the DNA result on baby Johnny. And Belle goes to drastic lengths to reunite Zak and Lisa. But will pretending to be hearing voices again get her mum and dad back together?

CORONATION STREET

Anna and Kevin sneak around for the entire week, trying to stop Sally finding out they're dating. Away from the Ray Cooney-esque farce, Robert threatens to leave Nick in the lurch and Tyrone admits to Fizz they're £10,000 in debt. And the "revenge porn" storyline is back when Luke tells Andy that Jamie has been released on bail.

EASTENDERS

With her psychosis increasing, Stacey is on the roof of the Vic telling Martin that Arthur isn't his son – he's God's. Phil's guilt gets to him and he blurts out the truth to Shirley and Sharon that he was driving the car on Christmas Day. And just as Alfie is about to reveal his health worries to Kat, in walks a newly recast Belinda, who starts throwing accusations about. DAVID BROWN

Benidorm

9.00pm ITV

SITCOM Benidorm is ailing. I speak as one who loved the earlier series but, as the eighth opens, it can barely crank out an ounce of credibility in the storylines, let alone a decent laugh. The Garveys are gone and with them any clout Steve Pemberton, Sheila Reid and Siobhan Finneran brought to the show (although Reid will be back for a guest spot).

A new family, the Dawsons (headed by a shrill Julie Graham), make little impact, while Joyce (Sherrie Hewson) seriously considers hiring the deeply unsavoury Marcus (Robin Askwith). On a positive note, Jacqueline gives her late hubby Donald a touching send-off, aided by hairdresser Troy (Paul Bazely, returning after four years away). PATRICK MULKERN

Crashing

10.00pm C4

SITCOM New series Property guardians, people who "protect" unoccupied premises in exchange for a roof over their heads, have now become the subject of this sprightly new comedy by Broadchurch alumna Phoebe Waller-Bridge. She plays Lulu, who comes to stay with old friend Anthony (Damien Molony) in the disused hospital flatshare, creating scenes fraught with heightened sexual tension.

His girlfriend Kate (Louise Ford), reluctantly agrees to flout the rules of their tenancy and hold a party for the priapic Sam (Jonathan Bailey). This is warm, stylish and full of energy, and most of the jokes hit home. Plus there's depth to these quirky, often reckless characters. BEN DOWELL

Siblings

10.30pm BBC3

SITCOM It's a terrible sitcom this. Obscene, shallow, full of unpleasant characters. But from its evil comic stew moments always bubble up that make you splutter with a sort of guilty laughter.

Tonight sees the reappearance of our siblings' mother (Stella Gonet) and in a new development, their hippie aunt Leslie (Sally Phillips), who takes a shine to doofus Dan. But as ever the best scenes belong to Charlotte Ritchie as his heartless sister Hannah, who believes she is at last having a Golden Week when everything goes right. It builds to a heroically tasteless climax as she appears in an R&B video while sweating more than the part strictly demands. DAVID BUTCHER

TOUGH CASE

Dr Thomas Chamberlain (Richard Lintern) and the team investigate the stabbing of an imam

Silent Witness

9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Pulling together seemingly unconnected story threads to reveal a plot line that reflects the West's current fears about terrorism should be absolutely engrossing from the start. Yet this takes such a long time to get going, there's a chance you may run out of patience.

First, we're in Bosnia, 1995, before switching to the present day with Nikki, Thomas and Jack investigating the stabbing of Amir Aziz, a vehemently anti-fundamentalist imam, and the arrival at a London airport of a nervous girl with a baby.

It doesn't take a forensic scientist to work out that the girl was involved in the Bosnian massacre, but why is she here and where does Aziz fit in? In the middle of all this Thomas is distracted by a rather bold suggestion by DI Nina Ryman (Esther Hall).

Fast Girls ★★★ 7.05pm Film4

We live in a post-Downton world and Lily James may always be haunted by her beloved character Lady Rose, a hedonistic “handful” who controversially fell for a black jazz musician and then married a Jew. But it was Fast Girls that gave James her first starring role on film. Since then, she’s played a Disney princess in Cinderella (Sky On Demand) and a Russian countess in TV’s War and Peace (Sundays BBC1). Next month, she turns action hero in Pride and Prejudice and Zombies. ANDREW COLLINS

New to rent today

Me and Earl and the Dying Girl ★★★★★ Sky Store

This Sundance festival favourite stars Thomas Mann as a self-obsessed teenager who’s forced by his mum to hang out with a girl (Olivia Cooke) who has been diagnosed with leukaemia. A genuine friendship then develops between the two, based on their shared sense of humour. The story has plenty of rib-ticklingly funny moments and witty exchanges, but it also succeeds in delivering a heart-rending finish. STELLA PAPAMICHAEL

Once upon a family

Mommy ★★★★★ Netflix

Recently arrived on Netflix, this superb drama stars Anne Dorval as a Quebec widow whose unruly teenage son (Antoine Olivier Pilon) has a violent form of ADHD. Director Xavier Dolan keeps the moods swinging – and the screen ratios switching – in a charming, artful and authentically played film. DAMON WISE

SPACE TALK
Prof Brian Cox and Dara O Briain will speak to Tim Peake (right) by video link

PICK OF THE DAY Stargazing Live 9.00pm BBC2

SCIENCE It's the series that reminds us annually about the part of the universe outside Earth, the part that is big, empty and entirely devoid of armchairs. And, this time round, it reminds us about the extraordinariness of sending people there – such as British astronaut Tim Peake.

Professor Brian Cox and Dara O Briain will connect to Peake via a live video link, and discuss how he's finding life on board the International Space Station. Brian and Dara will also attempt to make a garden shed fly, by way of exploring what keeps the ISS aloft, 250 miles above us.

Further afield, at the far end of the solar system, we'll be hearing from a Nasa scientist of the latest discoveries about (and stunning images of) Pluto, sent back by the New Horizons probe. And for astronomers, Dara and Brian will be enlisting help to find new pulsars – spinning stars that are heavier than the Sun, but smaller than Manchester. DAVID BUTCHER

Good Morning Britain

6.00am ITV

DAYTIME CHOICE The Big Short opened in the US to rave reviews, despite the labyrinthine and challenging subject matter (the financial crisis that crippled Wall Street in 2008). Most surprising, considering the complex material, is that it's a comedy. So while it's a bit early in the morning to take in financial terminology such as "synthetic collateralised debt obligation", this interview with star Steve Carell should be fun.

Based on Michael Lewis's book, the film also stars Christian Bale, Ryan Gosling and Brad Pitt, with Carell as a hedge fund manager railing against corruption. Carell may also talk about his recent project with Woody Allen. JANE RACKHAM

7.30pm BBC1

SOAP Why would anyone get in a car with reckless booze hound Phil Mitchell? The guy only has to turn the key in the ignition for the vehicle to career off the road and end up a write-off. Having notched up his fourth crash over the Christmas period, Phil is now wrestling with his guilt, what with Ian having taken the blame for the collision. Will he finally confess all to Sharon now that injured passenger Denny has contracted an infection?

Stacey's psychosis, meanwhile, is still intense and Martin is struggling to know what to do. But keeping his fears to himself looks set to be the wrong decision.

Victorian Bakers

8.00pm BBC2

REALITY The over-empathising is unabated as the bakers move forward to the bleak core of the Industrial Revolution, to 1870. It's hard, dirty work as the little group brings its 21st-century sensibilities and sensitivities to the baking experiment. "I kind of feel a bit depressed for them," says one about his forebears.

Another baker tells us, "The reason I came here was to see what my family did," before sharing his emotions after finding the kneading and baking experience "humbling".

But screen out the sentiment and there are some absorbing nuggets about the bread-making process, which included some curious additives. ALISON GRAHAM

Silent Witness

9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA After the dramatic ending to yesterday's first instalment of this two-part story, it's now clear that Sarah and her accomplice, whom we glimpsed briefly in the closing scene of part one, are on a mission, although we still don't know what their target is. "It's just a transition. I just helped them over the threshold... into another room," is his way of describing the shocking murders he has committed in the name of Allah.

While it's a satisfyingly tense story – and I don't mean to be picky – it's unbelievable how much the jihadis get away with in front of witnesses and in broad daylight. That said, the denouement made me gasp. JR

EMILIA FOX IN HER OWN WORDS

■ Speaking to RT in 2004 as she joined Silent Witness, Emilia Fox (then aged 29) described preparing for the role – including witnessing a real autopsy.

■ “I know it sounds strange, but it was rather wonderful when these internal organs were laid out in front of us – you wanted to reach out and touch them, though of course we didn’t.”

■ Introducing RT to her character Nikki, she said, “She’s a whirlwind force in what’s been a rather calm establishment.” And, after 12 years, she still is.

Derren Brown: Pushed to the Edge

9.00pm C4

ENTERTAINMENT TV rule of thumb: never get involved in a Derren Brown show. There will always be a covert agenda involving a stunt or “experiment” with the potential to scar a sensitive soul for life. At least, that sounds like the scenario in this one-off, where 29-year-old stooge Chris Kingston will be persuaded to – as far as he knows – commit murder.

Brown aims to coax Chris into pushing another person off a roof, seemingly to their death, using the power of “social compliance” (authority, peer pressure and so on) at the gala launch of a fictitious charity called Push. Special effects, stunt coordinators and a troupe of 70 actors add to the illusion. DAVID BUTCHER

Stella

9.00pm Sky1

COMEDY DRAMA Back to dispense some by now traditional new year cheer, Stella is on series five – can you believe it? Ruth Jones’s eisteddfod of feel-good is a great standard-bearer for the notoriously difficult comedy drama, knocking out one-liners but equally skilled at the dramatic beats.

You may remember (April is a long time ago) that Beyoncé had dropped a little spanner in Stella and Michael’s repairing relationship. Well, that plotline develops surprisingly. Elsewhere, Jag is now divorced and is about to open a pub, Nadine prepares for a christening, and a mysterious stranger enters town like a spaghetti-westerner (Tony Gardner, Lead Balloon’s Michael). Buoyant business as usual. MARK BRAXTON

The Knick

9.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA If you missed the first series of this handsome drama from director Steven Soderbergh, set around the New York Knickerbocker hospital in 1900, the stately paced opener to series two will bring you up to date. Brilliant chief of surgery John Thackery (Clive Owen) is confined to a clinic to overcome his drug addiction. Meanwhile, his ambitious deputy Algernon Edwards (Andre Holland) sees his chance in his boss’s absence – though the hospital board is not so keen on having a black chief.

10.00pm Discovery

REALITY New series Gold miners, loggers, ice road truckers – there’s no end to reality shows featuring people doing dangerous jobs with some feigned competition to up the drama. Here’s the latest addition – men and women braving the ocean as kayak fishermen or spear fisherwomen off the beautiful islands of Hawaii.

They have different motives – money-making, reputation-building or simply feeding themselves – but you can’t help but be impressed by their sheer stamina as they haul 100lb tuna up on to their flimsy-looking craft or hold their breath for four minutes under water. GILL CRAWFORD

ORDINARY HEROES

Inferno... or a chance in a lifetime for a stranger to save your life?

Saved

9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY Would you risk your life to save a total stranger? Perhaps most of us like to hope that if there were a moment where we suddenly had to decide whether to help someone in terrible trouble, we would rise to the occasion. But would we?

The people in this series did, and their instant heroism is what it celebrates. People such as Neville, a 50-year-old retired engineer out for a drive with his wife near the South Coast on a bank holiday Monday, when out of the blue they came on a scene of bizarre devastation.

The editing of the programme teases the story out and gets at the emotions of each agonising stage. The other story features kayak fisherman Dan, who got into difficulty off the coast of south Wales in 2013 and reached a grim conclusion: “There was no reason in the world to think I had any chance of surviving.” DAVID BUTCHER

8.00 Victorian Bakers

RT 2/3. This week the team move into an urban bakery in the midst of the Industrial Revolution, the 1870s. Machinery may be powering the nation but manual labour is cheap and so the bakers are still kneading by hand and are expected to double their output. It's back-breaking work, so much so that one participant decides to use his feet, which was a common practice in the late 19th century. Not surprisingly morale is low, and when they are tasked with using the adulterants their forebears added to Britain's breads, they wonder if it's safe to continue. Meanwhile, cake-maker Hapreet Baura tries her hand at making London Buns, which were hugely popular at the time. See page 84. (S) (AD) (HD)

Ice Cold in Alex ★★★★★ 4.20pm Film4

FREEVIEW CHOICE

In movies, some things just can't be faked. Like the scene where John Mills relishes an "ice cold" beer in this wartime classic. As he later recalled, "At 8.30am on the set I took a deep breath and downed, without pausing, a pint of continental lager. Six takes and six pints later, I was completely plastered. I still reckon that to be the happiest and most enjoyable morning I have ever spent in a film studio." Ah, such perfectionism! JAMIE HEALY

Box-office bombshell

Marilyn Monroe double bill from 2.00pm Sky Select

If blondes have more fun, then Marilyn Monroe is the movement's standard bearer. She did her best work in comedies and musicals, playing up to her sexy airhead image but with a knowing wink. That's evidenced today with showings of The Seven Year Itch (pictured) and Some Like It Hot. In the year that Marilyn would have turned 90, it's a poignant reminder of the carefree spirit she brought to the screen. STELLA PAPAMICHAEL

Ben's great escape

Argo ★★★★★ Amazon Prime

A true story that involves the CIA, Hollywood and the anti-American regime of Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini shouldn't be as enjoyable as this thriller. Ben Affleck directs and stars as the "exfiltration" expert hired to help bring home six US embassy workers hiding out in Tehran. A terrific yarn, it deftly offsets tension with comedy. DAMON WISE

Snooker 1.00pm, 7.00pm Eurosport 2 At last, Ronnie O'Sullivan returns to competitive snooker, in a first-round match against Mark Williams at the Masters this afternoon. The five-times Masters champion hasn't played a major event since the World Championship, but has confirmed he'll be at Alexandra Palace. If Rocket Ronnie is in the mood, that's bad news for opponents, including Williams – himself a two-times Masters winner. But there's no doubt that the Essex Express puts posteriors on seats. STEVE WALL

9.00pm BBC1 (Wales: Thu 8pm BBC2)

NATURE Our great naturalist's love letter to the aquamarine world off Australia's coast concludes with a plea. "I will never forget the first time I came here," he says, as we watch footage from his 1957 trip that strangely seems no less magical for being in black and white. "It was unimaginable then to think that we might ever lose the reef."

But we might. It could be gone in a few decades, Attenborough tells us, if the effects of climate change, local population growth and the expansion of industry go unchecked. In the past 30 years almost half the coral has disappeared. We learn how scientists are trying to breed more resilient corals and, for a glimpse of the reef's future, we look to its ancient history via computer modelling. This reveals the "drowned reef" beneath the current one – effectively, "the world's largest fossil".

And in a nice diversion, we meet an odd little shark that can "walk" out of water. DAVID BUTCHER

Dickensian

8.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Even lily-livered weasel Arthur Havisham is having doubts about his new friend Compeyson's intentions towards his half-sister, heiress Amelia. About time. But it could be too late for everyone as Compeyson's caddish plans step up several gears as he convinces Amelia's current beau, Matthew, that he'll win her love only if he keeps travelling around America. Arthur gibbers when he sees how far Compeyson is prepared to go to steal Amelia's brewery-based fortune.

Redoubtable plod Inspector Bucket turns his gimlet eye on Mr Barbary, who was seen with Jacob Marley on the night of his murder, Christmas Eve. ALISON GRAHAM

Trust Me, I'm a Doctor

8.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY This is such a sensible, clear-thinking series. Tonight, there are half a dozen issues for the medics and researchers to treat with a dose of scientific rigour. For instance – do artificial sweeteners such as saccharin make some people fatter by affecting their gut bacteria and how they process sugar? Can you lose weight by focusing less on what you eat and more on when?

Is any amount of alcohol bad for you? Do perfumed air fresheners and cleaning products leave toxins in our homes? Could you use WD40 as a treatment for problem skin? In each case, with various provisos, the answer turns out very broadly to be... yes. DB

Mary Portas Secret Shopper

8.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Women spend a small fortune on their hair during their lifetime and once they find a hairdresser they like, they tend to stick with them for ever. So initially Mary Portas can't figure out why Shobiz in Sidcup should be struggling to keep customers.

But secret filming reveals "a bunch of what look like school kids effing, jeffing and dancing about" while ignoring (or bad-mouthing) customers. The tension between stropky staff and overbearing owner Shobie is incredible. It's a challenge for Mary to persuade micro-managing Shobie to stop being an ogre and the staff to give it their all. JANE RACKHAM

LACHLAN GOUDIE'S TV HERO

The artist and The Big Painting Challenge judge says: "Like thousands of other children in the 1980s, I used to tune in to watch Tony Hart [right] present Hartbeat. My father was an artist, an extrovert, theatrical type, whereas Tony seemed more like a benevolent grandfather. I'd often hear Dad in his studio, shouting at a canvas in frustration, while on TV Tony would calmly talk his audience through the creation of an artwork. It was hypnotic." Lachlan Goudie hosts The Story of Scottish Art (8pm BBC4)

The Story of Scottish Art

8.00pm BBC4

ARTS A strange tension sits at the heart of the Scottish psyche, slaloming between various poles: Catholic and Protestant, down to earth but prone to mythologising. Artist Lachlan Goudie resumes his enthusiastic tour of Scottish art with the dawn of the Scottish Enlightenment, when geniuses such as Allan Ramsay shook off the Reformation by combining vibrancy with realism. Ramsay refused to do "painted liposuction" for his rich clients, who still loved his double-chins-and-all portraits.

One of his secrets? Despite their moody black backgrounds, he began his portraits with a layer of bright red, shining out from beneath the surface.

JONATHAN HOLMES

24 Hours in A&E

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Prepare to be reduced to tears by the lovely Ted, who utterly adores Carole, his wife of 60 years. She's come in with a stroke, but their son Nigel is almost as concerned about Ted, who has heart problems and is trembling under the weight of his concern for his wife. They met at 14, and by 15 he'd bought her a wedding ring, which he wore around his neck until they married.

Also at St George's is David, 77, who has an infected toe. Diabetes means he's already lost two toes, and wife Kathy is almost nonchalant about the idea he may lose another: "I hope it doesn't fall off in my front room and my cat gets it!" And Yvette, 33, is also in tears because of her false eyelashes. HANNAH SHADDOCK

Empire of the Tsars

9.00pm BBC4

HISTORY Murder, rebellion and military disasters are on the menu as Lucy Worsley dishes up another tasty slice of Russian royal history. She may have spent much of the previous episode talking about the Romanov men, but this time the women take centre stage as she profiles Catherine the Great, one of the most powerful women ever to take a throne.

Worsley tells the tale of the "great and progressive" ruler, who came to power by virtue of a military coup, before going on to oversee the nation's expansion in the Golden Age of the Russian Empire.

SARAH DORAN

Occupied

9.00pm Sky Arts

DRAMA New series This Norwegian political thriller from crime writer Jo Nesbo has caused an international furore, with the Kremlin displeased by its depiction of a Russian occupation of Norway. It's not a nuanced study of geopolitics, yet has fed into Nordic concerns about Russian expansion in the region.

The plot about the EU-sanctioned occupation being a reaction to Norway ceasing gas and oil production verges on the ludicrous but the action is explosive.

DAVID CRAWFORD

Midsomer Murders

8.00pm ITV

DRAMA DCI Barnaby peers sceptically up at the sky. There has to be a rational explanation but it's not easy to see what. Midsomer has been attacked by aliens.

Yes, it might seem unlikely, but in the opening we see for ourselves a forest ranger abandon her car on a country road as something looms overhead with a rush of wind and blinding lights.

She's found dead the next day wrapped in some kind of alien slime that even Cam, the new pathologist, can't identify. Gangs of local UFO-watchers are going nuts. But as Barnaby says, "Why would an alien cross a galaxy to visit a small hamlet in the corner of England?"

Why indeed. Unless, perhaps, it's not aliens? Unless, bear with me here, it's a stew of local rivalries and betrayals boiling over after years of resentment? If so, Barnaby's the man to sieve that stew. DAVID BUTCHER

A life in pictures

Finding Vivian Maier ★★★★★ Now TV/Virgin

This compelling documentary traces the life of former nanny Vivian Maier, who, after her death, was revealed to be a brilliant photographer. In 2007, John Maloof bought an old box of negatives and, amazed by their quality, resolved to find out who took them. In trying to bring this private woman's life into focus, Maloof and co-director Charlie Siskel's film reveals a complex character with shades of darkness. ADAM SMITH

Summer Holiday ★★★ 2.40pm Film4

FREEVIEW CHOICE

For this, his fourth film, a still quiff-tastic Cliff Richard was deemed bankable enough to warrant a trip to Greece – the most exotic location up until then had been Ruislip Lido on a rare sunny day for The Young Ones. Wherever he was, Cliff was unmistakably Cliff, although wags might say he was never better than as a puppet in the 1966 adventure Thunderbirds Are Go! TONY PETERS

Sky Sci-Fi/Horror

Today you can enjoy back-to-back showings of the films that made Mel Gibson a star and the dusty Aussie highways a place to be feared. The franchise was jump started again in 2015 with Tom Hardy heading down Fury Road, and its massive success means there'll be more Max to come. JAMIE HEALY

Premier League Football 7.15pm BT Sport 1 A big midweek fixture as Liverpool take on Arsenal at Anfield. An important cog in the Reds machine is James Milner, who seems to have been around for ever, but has only just turned 30. The ever-adaptable midfielder's career has taken in Leeds, Newcastle, Aston Villa and Manchester City, not to mention 57 full England caps. For their part, the Gunners are bristling with attacking intent, and will not feel at all restricted by playing away. STEVE WALL

LINE OF INQUIRY

JP, Dwayne, Humphrey, Florence and Selwyn unpick a murderous web

PICK OF THE DAY Death in Paradise 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Awkwardness is the operative word for Death in Paradise tonight. For a start, there are Humphrey's inept attempts to find himself "the future Mrs Humphrey... the second" via a matchmaking website, with the help of a sceptical Dwayne (Danny John-Jules).

Even more troublingly, there's the question of his boss's possible involvement in a murder – but Commissioner Selwyn Patterson (Don Warrington) couldn't be, could he..?

The victim is Saint-Marie's outgoing governor (a brief cameo from Lucy Cohu), who dies of cyanide poisoning in the gardens of Government House, just after taking a glass of champagne from... the police commissioner himself. Assuming that he didn't slip the poison in her glass, who on earth did? Humphrey (Kris Marshall) and co unpick a web of blackmail, bugging, love affairs, moles and a French diplomat with a vaping habit.

As ever, the plot is paper-thin but sunnily irresistible. DAVID BUTCHER

The Age of the Drone

7.50pm PBS America

DOCUMENTARY Here's something to give you pause for thought. Unmanned aerial vehicles (drones) are more than likely to impact on our lives in the years ahead. Drones that can deliver packages, use heat-seeking imagery to pick out lost hikers in the wild or battle each other in a "Game of Drones" arena are one thing, but what about the possible infringements on our privacy from that eye in the sky?

Could we be threatened by swarms of payload-bearing drones dropping explosives in multiple locations? This documentary gives space to all sides of the debate, from fearful civil liberties advocates to the tech entrepreneurs looking bravely into the future. GILL CRAWFORD

Britain's Bloody Crown

8.00pm Channel 5

HISTORY Hipster historian Dan Jones strives hard to make his subject groovy and relevant, describing Elizabeth Woodville (the White Queen, consort of Edward IV) as "basically a chav". I say, steady on. Just because she was a widow with two children and from a large family of ambitious nobles? Later, he talks of how the kingmaker Earl of Warwick "could go large".

Maybe Jones thinks the Wars of the Roses is just too big a subject to be told straight and perhaps he has a point. Tonight he looks at Edward's reign and the Northern insurrections among a restless population who feared their taxes were being misused by the grasping Woodvilles.

ALISON GRAHAM

Room 101

8.30pm BBC1

ENTERTAINMENT "Let's see what's on the whine list," says host Frank Skinner. Room 101 is the series where celebrities air pet peeves, then find that Skinner has something wittier to say about what they've chosen.

Being gently, brilliantly upstaged is a precondition of the show: guest David Tennant's selection of his own South African accent for consignment to the vault is followed by an anecdote from Skinner about auditioning for a part that required an American accent, his only version of which was "Wild West old-timer".

Another gripe about sushi is met with Skinner noting the resemblance between salmon sushi and Ed Sheeran. Skinner's one-upmanship makes for a droll half-hour. DB

Birds of a Feather

8.30pm ITV

SITCOM Sharon, Tracey and Dorian are wondering what to do now they've been burgled. The police are being useless, as are their old gangster mates. "I'm not taking this lying down," announces Dorian. "There's a novelty," mutters Sharon. If lines like this and jokes about getting a private dick involved make you laugh, you'll be splitting your sides throughout.

However, Pauline Quirke and Linda Robson seem to be just going through the motions with only Lesley Joseph giving it a bit of welly. There's a wonderful moment where Dorian is confronted with a drag act dressed up as her alter ego, porn writer Foxy Cohen. "Poxo Cohen" looks frighteningly like her. JANE RACKHAM

DAN JONES'S TOP READS

The hipster host of Britain's Bloody Crown (8pm Channel 5) reveals his favourite chronicles of the Wars of the Roses.

■ "Shakespeare's two cycles of plays – Richard II and Richard III – are the most brilliant renderings of the 15th century."

■ "Josephine Tey's The Daughter of Time has inspired generations of readers to comb over the history and tease fact from propaganda."

■ "The Wars of the Roses by Christine Carpenter and Helen Castor's Blood and Roses are definitive works. I was taught by these two brilliant medievalists."

Jericho

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA There's so much bar-room brawling and bare-knuckle boxing, we could all be forgiven for expecting John Wayne to amble into shot, possibly on a horse. Jericho's resemblance to a western becomes even more acute in the second episode as the men and women of the Yorkshire frontier town, clustered around the building of a railway viaduct, live brutally pragmatic lives.

The stereotypes are in place – the lawman (Mark Addy) who strolls into the bar and shuts everyone up with his mere presence as he hunts the missing mine saboteur, and the brothel madam (Lorraine Ashbourne) who services the menfolk's needs.

By 'eck and giddy up! AG

The Restoration Man

9.00pm C4

PROPERTY "That is ridiculously good!" enthuses George Clarke at the end of this week's loving restoration. You get the feeling the presenter is genuinely a bit bowled over by the efforts of financial advisor Lee Head in turning a Victorian railway station into a (long, thin) family home.

The result manages to incorporate elements of the original design so that putting, say, a bathroom in the old ticket office seems to make complete sense. The heroic part is that Lee does the whole thing single-handed, working nights and weekends. While watching his labours (over several years) we learn about the history of a Northumbrian branch line that never made money and was killed in the end by buses. DB

A League of Their Own

9.00pm Sky1

ENTERTAINMENT Ashley Cole is football's forgotten man these days, and it's not just because he left the Premier League. Cole's move to Italian side Roma was meant to be a late career blossoming for England's best left back – except he's hardly played. So it takes a while to clock exactly who he is when he pops up on A League of Their Own this week – especially when he pulls on the gloves to save penalties from S Club 7 singer Rachel Stevens. Is this Cole's plan for a post-football career? Coming to a talent show near you... JAMES GILL

Busting the Drugs Millions

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY A previous film looked at the National Crime Agency's busting of a paedophile ring. For this second documentary, the focus moves to money laundering. Cameras follow a nine-month NCA op aimed at a sprawling criminal network. The inquiry begins with surveillance on just one man before 100 officers follow trails around the country.

Money laundering is big business in Britain, as drugs gangs contract out their "dirty money" to specialist laundering groups with agents operating throughout the world. AG

5.00pm CBBC

The team welcome some very special guests as the cast of CBBC's mega-hit The Next Step appear live in the studio. Barney heads to Blackpool to visit some rays that are under threat in the wild, and Lindsey draws the short straw by investigating the deepest sewage tunnel in the UK.

SCHOOL OF HARD ROCK

The genre's elder statesman
Brian Pern (Simon Day)

Brian Pern: 45 Years of Prog and Roll

10.00pm BBC4

COMEDY We rejoin old-school rock star Brian Pern (he's Peter Gabriel, but he isn't Peter Gabriel) as he celebrates 45 years in the business. But he's at the mercy of an abrasive, new ballsy American wife Astrid (Suranne Jones, who's terrifying and funny) and she has big plans for Brian, plans that exclude his vituperative manager John Farrow.

Though lovers of the greatest of behind-the-scenes rock pastiches Spinal Tap will find some familiar scenarios here, Simon Day's deluded, pretentious, faintly stupid prog-rocker is still a winner. Day is deadpan-perfect as a man-child trapped by his own success and overblown, unworkable ideas. He's got that elder statesman rock-star lack of self-awareness down perfectly, though it's Michael Kitchen as the volcanically foul-mouthed Farrow who steals the scenes. ALISON GRAHAM

Casting Katniss

The Hunger Games ★★★★★ 9.00pm Film4
FREEVIEW CHOICE

Now the series has ended, it's hard to think of anyone but Jennifer Lawrence in the role of gutsy heroine Katniss Everdeen (see Andrew Collins, page 38). But she faced tough competition for the part, with Saoirse Ronan, Chloë Grace Moretz, Kaya Scodelario and Shailene Woodley among the auditions. But when it came to choosing his Katniss, director Gary Ross said, "It was the easiest casting decision I ever made." JAMIE HEALY

Director of the week

Birdman ★★★★★ 10.15pm Sky Select

Mexican writer/director Alejandro González Iñárritu may now abbreviate his middle name to "G", but nothing else about this rare global talent is shrinking. His movies have always dealt with big themes: cruelty (Amores Perros); grief (21 Grams); responsibility (Babel); and respectability (Birdman). And tomorrow sees the release of his latest film, The Revenant, an ambitious, snowbound thriller about survival and mortality. Bring it on! ANDREW COLLINS

Returning to Sky today

Great Expectations ★★★

Sky Drama/Romance

This modern-day take on the Dickens classic is set amid the eerie Everglades and the New York art scene. Gwyneth Paltrow is perhaps too shallow to be worthy of Ethan Hawke's obsession, but Anne Bancroft and Robert De Niro provide actorly substance.

GREAT SCOT
DI Jimmy Perez (Douglas Henshall) focuses on finding a missing person

PICK OF THE DAY Shetland 9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA We return to the savage, bleak beauty of the Shetland Islands and the world's most haunted detective, Jimmy Perez, in a new series based on writer Ann Cleeves's characters. Perez (Douglas Henshall) and his little team of two – Tosh and Sandy (Alison O'Donnell and Steven Robertson) – investigate after a worried young woman reports a missing person, a man she became friendly with during a ferry crossing from the mainland. But he'd vanished by the time they docked at Lerwick. Soon, packets of deadly "recreational" drugs begin to wash up on the shore, with devastating consequences.

It's an engaging mystery with enough questions dancing in the chill Scottish breeze to catch our interest, notably: who is the grizzled character, the "security consultant" (Ciarán Hinds) behaving in a way calculated to arouse suspicion? And why is a horrible old man terrorising the fellow residents of a care home?

ALISON GRAHAM

A Place in the Sun: Winter Sun

4.00pm C4

DAYTIME CHOICE January is traditionally the month we Brits start thinking about booking a holiday in the sun so this is a perfect piece of travel escapism if your fantasies are leading you towards the Caribbean. Murila Fifer was born on the island of Nevis and it's a place close to her heart. She and husband Steven have visited the island together many times but have now decided they'd like to buy a holiday home there.

They've got £330,000 to spend on their dream home and Scarlett Douglas manages to find five properties within budget. But will they opt for a country villa or a beachside home?

JANE RACKHAM

Bloody Queens: Elizabeth and Mary

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK

This is juicy stuff, history red in tooth and regal claw. Actors perform extracts from the letters between Elizabeth I and Mary Queen of Scots while historians relate the incredible course of their relationship. The letters are couched in amazing language: if the dynastic melodrama and endless manoeuvrings between them were fiction, you'd think it was overdone.

The two never met, but saw themselves as sisters, young queens of neighbouring kingdoms who sent each other gifts and endearments. But the sisterly bond unravelled and the story ended, of course, very badly. DAVID BUTCHER

Mr Selfridge

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA After last week's disastrous and faintly comical unveiling of the Queen of Time statue when Harry came a cropper, he's recovering by the sea, in a big blue cardie. "You got another chance, Harry. Make the most of it," says his wise old mum.

But Harry can't stay away from his beloved store, and the journalists who unaccountably hang around there all day, every day, are eager for a story. So he gives them one with the opening of a technology department. And in a subplot that nods to modern concerns, there's the whiff of racism in the seamstresses' workroom where a talented young black woman is given a job by the forward-thinking Lady Mae. AG

Spin

9.00pm More4

DRAMA News has broken of French presidential candidate Anne Visage's affair with the assassinated leader and her campaign is in trouble, until her spin doctor, Simon Kapita, steps in. Yes, of course, she must be rescued by a man. And this is while her chief speech writer weeps on the phone to her brutally indifferent ex-boyfriend, the caddish Ludo (Gregory Fitoussi), whining on about how she misses him and has he found someone else?

Spin is still an effective political thriller, despite the wishy-washy female characters – there's a big lie hovering over the official account of the president's murder and much political horse-trading as the candidates jostle for acceptance. AG

CUPID'S BEAU

As maître d' of the restaurant featured in First Dates (10pm C4), Fred Sirieix (right) has become a star of the series, imparting pearls of wisdom about the art of love each week.

"It just depends if people have that je ne sais quoi or if they find va va vroom together," is this cupid's main observation.

Sirieix's day job, however, is managing the Michelin-starred restaurant Galvin at Windows, though he's no stranger to TV, co-hosting BBC2's Michel Roux's Service in 2002.

QI

10.00pm BBC2

COMEDY "Imagine an imaginary menagerie manager managing an imaginary menagerie," says Stephen Fry at the beginning of this animal-themed episode – and things scarcely get less confusing as the game goes on.

Whether it's the intricacies of moose mating rituals and the battles of the moustachioed toads to the methods behind shaving lazy monkeys and the titillation of ocelots, it's a barrage of informative animal mayhem that's enough to make you interested in heading to the zoo again.

And as ever, there's enough obscure trivia to make you the best pub quiz contestant your friends could ever wish for. Quite interesting, indeed. HUW FULLERTON

First Dates

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Generously scattered with fluffy proverbs about love, First Dates could be dismissed as yet another cheeky, easygoing dating show, but its quiet prodding of the single hopefuls can make it an emotionally involving watch. This is never more true than in tonight's series opener, as 29-year-old Arunima reveals her doubts that a man will ever see beyond her wheelchair – or share her passion for bingo.

Elsewhere, 23-year-old Sasha reluctantly confesses that she feels unloveable, and dog owner Suzie has faith that "pug love" can conquer all.

Matchmaking maître d' Fred has fired his arrows – you'll laugh, you'll coo, you'll definitely squirm.

SARAH CARSON

The Graham Norton Show

10.35pm BBC1

ENTERTAINMENT Friends star Matthew Perry trades the Central Perk couch for Norton's red sofa as he talks life, work, and of course, being Chandler Bing. The actor is making his West End playwriting debut with The End of Longing next month, so we're sure there'll be plenty of chat about that, too. Plus Bond girl Gemma Arterton is taking on the role of the 17th-century royal mistress in Nell Gwynn at Shakespeare's Globe, and she'll be on hand to tell our Graham all about it. SARAH DORAN

Garth Marengi's Darkplace/Nathan Barley

11.40pm/12.10am Gold

COMEDY It's ten years old now, but savage hipster satire Nathan Barley is as relevant as ever. A pre-Mighty Boosh Julian Barratt stars as the reluctant guru to a crew of air-headed bandwagon jumpers who say things like: "Keep it foolish, yeah." Mock horror anthology Garth Marengi's Darkplace, featuring Richard Ayoade and Matt Berry, is also worth catching. It's got niche appeal, but does contain some classic scenes. Hunt down 80s yacht-rock pastiche One Track Lover on YouTube if you need further convincing. GARY ROSE

CHILDREN'S CHOICE

Sam & Mark's Big Friday Wind Up

5.30pm CBBC

Fresh from Junior Bake Off, Sam and Mark return for more chaos and wind-ups with the help of guest Peter Andre. After lots of Dick and Dom-inspired games like "Lick My Filthy Dishes", boy band the Vamps close the show.

GLAM ROCK
Led Zeppelin's Robert Plant and below, manager Peter Grant

Music Moguls: Masters of Pop

DOCUMENTARY New series

If you've ever doubted the power of management, check out the first of a three-part rockumentary. Hair-blanching stories of manipulation and intimidation line the journey from Presley to Bieber, featuring the svengalis who pulled the strings. Not that they were all cut from the same cloth. Brian Epstein wanted to be the Beatles' friend and by his own admission wasn't ruthless enough (he's thought to have cost the group $100m in merchandising failures).

More typical are stories of the tough guys: the Al Capone of pop Don Arden (Small Faces and ELO) and Peter Grant (Led Zeppelin), who was either "a very nice guy" or "a thug who beat people up", depending who you believe here.

There's intriguing rationale for the Who's destructive antics, the ever-splendid Gandalf of glam Noddy Holder, and proof positive that some rock stars have their anecdotes down pat. MARK BRAXTON

DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK

9.00 Bloody Queens: Elizabeth and Mary

RT The explosive relationship between Elizabeth I and Mary, Queen of Scots – who never actually met – is explored in this documentary drama, using reconstructions and expert opinion to bring to life intimate letters between the two. Of all the dangers Elizabeth had to survive – the Spanish Armada, a Catholic continent plotting against her, restless nobles uneasy at her refusal to marry – none was so personally intense as the perilous rivalry with her cousin Mary, Queen of Scots. Why did a friendship once united by blood become ruined by scandal, revenge and, finally, execution? Narrated by Bernard Hill. See page 114.

History in the making

Selma ★★★★★ 10.00pm Sky Premiere

Brit David Oyelowo gives a career-defining performance as Dr Martin Luther King (see Barry Norman My Movies, p39), as he leads civil rights marches through Alabama. There's an epic feel to the massed scenes on Edmund Pettus Bridge, but most of the action takes place indoors, getting the most out of a huge cast in smaller parts (including producer Oprah Winfrey, rapper Common and an uncredited Martin Sheen). ANDREW COLLINS

FREEVIEW - CULT SEASON OF THE WEEK

The 36th Chamber of Shaolin ★★★ 10.55pm Film4

Friday night is all right for fighting, as Film4 kicks off a season of vintage martial arts classics from the Shaw Brothers stable. Showing in a polished print and without comically bad dubbing, tonight's Eastern entertainment sees Gordon Liu learning the kung fu ropes in The 36th Chamber of Shaolin. In future weeks, you can enjoy more expertly choreographed mayhem in King Boxer, Come Drink with Me and One-Armed Swordsman. JAMIE HEALY

Excalibur ★★★★★ 10.45pm TCM

This vivid and passionate telling of the Arthurian legend is new to TCM today. Director John Boorman offers a thoroughly convincing visualisation of the Knights of the Round Table myth within Dark Ages history, with Nicol Williamson, Nigel Terry and Helen Mirren all making their mark in the cast. ALAN JONES

 the Third Test between South Africa and England at New tour, Jonny Bairstow landed the slightly problematical gig of England wicketkeeper/batsman. Aggressive with the willow in his hands, the Yorkshireman is likely to be on the end of some short-pitched stuff from the Proteas' pacemen. He began his career as a 'keeper, and now has a chance to make the England gloves his own. STEVE WALL

Bring on the revolution!

Radio needs to get radical to win bigger audiences in 2016, says Jane Anderson

THE ARCHERS IS one of the cornerstones of the Radio 4 schedule. To move it is to invoke the seismic rage of middle England. This was proved 20 years ago when the then controller of Radio 4, James Boyle, shifted the drama from after the lunchtime news to its current 2pm slot. They may not have had burning pitchforks in hand, but listeners marched upon Broadcasting House to display their ire en masse.

So, as we radio devotees settle into a new year, what is 2016 likely to bring? The memories of Boyle's revolution may have dimmed but are not forgotten, and no controllers are likely to "fix" what isn't actually broken in the near future.

But for radio to continue to win audience figures that daytime TV schedulers would kill for, this means taking a few risks. Things have to be shaken up a little if radio is to remain fresh.

For starters, we now listen in such different ways. Many may mark their day from breakfast with the Today programme and dinner preparations with The News Quiz to unwinding with the Book at Bedtime, but just as many others are now their own scheduler – downloading programmes and listening to them when and where they want to.

The structured rigidity of the schedule will not vanish in 2016, but its role will cease to be as important, as more and more listeners switch to creating their own radio timetables to suit their lifestyles.

For years now I have found it so heartily frustrating how much brilliant content we never get to hear. Programme-makers from every genre – interviews to documentaries – have all said the same thing to me: the toughest thing about getting something ready for broadcast is deciding what has to be left out.

IN A SPIN
Let's hear Kirsty Young's Desert Island Discs in its entirety

'If there is a great show, don't limit it to 45 mins'

Desert Island Discs is a case in point. Who can forget Yoko Ono telling Kirsty Young the thoughts racing through her head when Mark David Chapman gunned down John Lennon in front of their New York home? There was enough material to fill 90 minutes, but it was cut to the prescribed 45-minute slot. Even the version of the show available online is similarly limited. Our loss, as well as hers.

I really hope that 2016 will see schedulers and network controllers taking some calculated risks. If there's an outstanding episode or edition of a cornerstone programme such as Desert Island Discs, then let's hear it in its entirety. Listeners will ride with changes like this if the content is outstanding. It's quality output that we love, not formulaic scheduling.

Radio 3 tried this out last September by jettisoning the traditional Through the Night and replacing it with an eight-hour programme called Sleep – Max Richter's composition of the same name. It started at 12 midnight and was the longest single continuous piece of music ever broadcast live on the BBC.

Beds were provided for the invited audience and the composer himself said, "If the audience stays awake I will consider it the greatest insult!" Radio 3's phone lines were not jammed with complaints the next morning. They took a risk, the listeners went with it and it was a resounding success.

I'd also like 2016 to see an end to roping in the latest boy band, cake baker, X Factor finalist or other one-minute wonder to "host" a show. I would not go to One Direction for work on my teeth or to get my car serviced, so why should I be subjected to them "presenting" a show on radio – as they did, along with a gaggle of other youthful poplets, on Radio 1 on Christmas Day?

Presenters like Chris Evans, Eddie Mair and Christian O'Connell did not just turn up at the BBC or Absolute one day and suggest they'd like to have a go on the wireless. They've all grafted for years to learn their craft. It's a skill and should be treated as such. Securing a starry name to present a show may get people to tune in, but they won't stay for long if the delivery is disastrous.

Over in the commercial world the stations have no licence fee to fund their programme-making. Ads are an irritating but necessary evil, but "audience reach" is what counts to their investors and shareholders – if the number of listeners repeatedly goes down rather than up, the presenter, the show and sometimes even the network itself, are axed.

This means that it's even harder to take risks. Play those pop hits, golden oldies and classical favourites, but don't try anything new. The sales team can't sell ads against imaginative concepts.

Thankfully, this is beginning to change, albeit late at night, which is a "dead zone" for radio ads anyway. Absolute, for example, has started to commission music documentaries that would sit quite happily on 6 Music or Radio 4. Bring It On Home: the Led Zeppelin Story, which went out last autumn, combined first-person accounts and rare recordings. It was well received by critics and listeners alike. Expertly researched and made programmes like these will engage audience loyalty a hundred times over the traditional DJ-song-DJ format. Plus it was broadcast well after dark.

'Let's see an end to one-minute wonders "hosting" shows'

ONE FINAL SUGGESTION: Pause for Thought and Thought for the Day. Who would not want to hear some of our great thinkers, scientists and broadcasters like Clive James, Stephen Hawking and Joan Bakewell start our days with intelligent, thought-provoking observations that do not have to involve a higher being? I am not for one second calling for an end to airtime for religious thinkers, but surely there is a place for agnostic, atheist and humanist voices, too?

And so, back to The Archers, where we began. We've all got used to the 2pm slot now. In fact, if current Radio 4 controller Gwyneth Williams were to change it, Broadcasting House would find itself surrounded again. No, the next public outpouring of dismay will only come if Helen does not manage to disengage herself from the psychopathic Rob before the year's out!

PICK OF THE WEEK

BY JANE ANDERSON

Drama on 3: Artist Descending a Staircase Sunday 9.00pm Radio 3

Tom Stoppard wrote this play specifically for radio and it was first broadcast in November 1972 on Radio 3. Although it has had subsequent theatre productions, the staging has always been criticised for letting the script and actors down – offering visual distractions where sound is the true star of the show.

And so it is with a triumphant swagger that the drama returns to its original radio home and with a wonderful new cast to perform it: Derek Jacobi (below), Ian McDiarmid, Geoffrey Whitehead and Pippa Nixon.

It's set in 1972. The dead body of an artist, Donner (Ian McDiarmid), is found at the foot of the stairs to the attic studio he shares with two fellow artists, Beauchamp (Derek Jacobi, below) and Martello (Geoffrey Whitehead). The three of them have known, lived and worked with each other for over 50 years. And to say that their temperaments are as explosive as their artwork is an understatement.

Stoppard works the radio medium with such cunning, moving us back through time in each scene by using younger actors until the pivotal moment in 1914 – and then coming forward to 1972 again with the older voices main stage.

It's no coincidence that the only character who can truly see what is going on in the minds and lives of these three deluded, self-important men is blind. Sophie (played by Pippa Nixon) is a powerful female by Stoppard's standards and gets some of the funniest lines in what is ultimately the definition of a tragicomedy. You'll laugh, but you'll also cry.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

Helen is feeling inspired and wants to take initiative in the farm shop – but will Rob be supportive? I'm guessing not, as he seems to have strong opinions about what Helen should be prioritising. Rex and Toby are in the mood to celebrate – it looks like they've bought themselves more time to develop as farmers. But if only Rex's love life was so happy as there seems to be a rival for a certain young lady's affections. Phoebe is also suffering in her relationship as she tries to puzzle out her future.

Plough Sunday sees Ed trying to get over his nerves about public speaking. And as Charlie looks to his future, can he let go of Ambridge and its familiar people and places?

Wet wet wet!

Why did the presenter buy a raincoat?

HAVING THE CORRECT outerwear is of paramount importance at this slightly inclement time of year. I'm sorry. That first sentence reads like the opening words of a 30-minute-long As Seen on TV infomercial imploring you to buy a snow-proof donkey jacket As Worn By Eskimos (order now and get a second one free!).

In fact, I want to issue a word of warning. Not "Don't eat yellow snow", although that's good advice usually attributed to Eskimos, now enjoying an unprecedented second mention in Radio Times. Or the advice "Never eat anything the listeners send in" – the words of Sir Terence Wogan and he never uttered a truer bon mot.

I want to tell you about my experience getting caught in the rain the other day, as I sipped a piña colada. I have a few winter coats. One is long and quite warm: handy for those chilly but dry days. Another anorak-style thing puts you in mind of Nanook of the North. You could wear that thing in an Arctic wind tunnel while being gunged with ice-cold water and remain dry as a raisin. It's perfect for most wintry days, but it does weigh more than the national debt.

'One jacket weighed less than Piers Morgan's self-awareness'

Which is why I found myself in a trendy store, feeling about 20 years too old to be there (OK, 30), prodding one of those shiny ultra-light magical jackets that promise to keep you toasty while weighing less than Piers Morgan's self-awareness. As I slipped it on in front of the mirror I marvelled at how weightless it appeared to be. Photographs above the rail showed delirious models equally thrilled by the item. One chap was even caught in some water sprinkles yet he was grinning like Tony Blair's Cheshire cat that had just got the cream and a £1 million meowing contract. Sure, I would look like a shiny Michelin man wearing it, but I didn't care. Light. Warm. Able to withstand the rain. Sold to the elderly gentleman in aisle three.

For several chilly days my new item was like a second, shiny skin. It would fold up into a tiny ball but fold out easily to form a warm layer. How had I lived 50 years without this miracle?

Then the other day I got caught in the rain. Granted, it was not the light watering-can-sprinkling the chirpy model endured. This was a good old British drenching. It pelted down from front door to Broadcasting House. I felt wet.

AND SURE ENOUGH when I got to my desk and began to peel off my trusty jacket, it transpired I was wet. Soaked through. Mark Mardell was preparing for that day's World at One and looked up to enquire whether I had a two-tone shirt. The straps of my rucksack had slightly protected part of my shirt, but most of it was a much darker colour: the rain had simply soaked through the jacket. I was as drenched as if I'd gone out without a coat.

Upon reading the small print in the shop's online boutique, I discovered my magical jacket is in fact "water repellent" and "water resistant". Those phrases mean "designed to resist but not entirely prevent the penetration of water".

So the model enduring a light sprinkle was fine. Me on a typical rainy day was not.

Perhaps a brighter columnist would have sussed that before purchase, but it's me, so I leave my experience with you to do with as you please.

MY PEOPLE

BY STUART MACONIE

THE LOOK OF LOVE

David Blunkett's council's 2p unlimited bus travel, cheap, tasty curries and a fertile music scene made Sheffield a great place to be young in the 80s. I accompanied my mate John there for a uni interview in the week that ABC's Lexicon of Love was released and I informed our party that, should we meet frontman Martin Fry, I would tell him what a wonderful record he'd made. I never imagined that this would occur but, implausibly, driving down a back street by a park, I announced, "There he is!" For it was he, strolling along in a blue cagoule. I got out, awkwardly did as I had announced, got back in the car, and we drove away in astounded silence. On the many occasions I've met Martin since, I have often brought this up and he always has the good grace to pretend to remember, bless him. (The Look of Love, Tuesday 2am 6 Music)

WHEN URCHINS RULED THE WORLD

As the most northern, most enthusiastic and, moreover, least senior NME staffer in the late 80s, I was dispatched to Liverpool in the early 90s to investigate a scene happening there called Urchin Rock. I had a great day with some likeable "scally" bands trading in cheeky, psychedelic dole-queue rock: the Hoovers from Cantril Farm, Rain and one called the Real People who were rather good. Later they would help a roadie called Noel Gallagher (right) make a demo tape that aped their style. Thus, smartened up a little, Urchin Rock would rule the mid-90s, but dressed in an outsized parka and relocated along the East Lancs Road. (The Real People are on 6 Music Live Hour, Mon 2.30am 6 Music)

DUSTBIN DAYS

While working at that paper, the last part of the year would always be taken up in the preparation of the NME's Christmas double issue. For this we would find silly things for bands to do. Thus I persuaded Blur to dress as Blondie, went to the Alps with the Stone Roses and, less glamorously, went carol singing in the Black Country with Ned's Atomic Dustbin. Incredibly, a young woman in Bilston recognised them and made their Christmas. Happy days. (6 Music Live Hour, Mon 2.30am 6 Music)

Drama: How to Flee from Sorrow 2.30pm Radio 4

Ostensibly known for his chamber cantatas, the 17th-century Italian composer Alessandro Stradella, enjoyed enormous success under Queen Christina's patronage in Rome, but had to flee to Venice after he and his violinist sidekick (played by Ralf Little, above) conned a rich man. It was to signal the beginning of a tragic end for the composer of mellifluous melodies, who was eventually killed by a hired assassin. Juggling commissions, scrabbling for cash and fleeing from scandal form the essence of the composer's dramatic life. The cadence and character of Stradella's funny and fiery life, and his love for Agnese, the niece of the doge of Venice, is handsomely captured by Frank Cottrell-Boyce in his new drama, which is based on original historical letters. With Trystan Gravelle as Stradella, Harry Treadaway as Corelli and Alice St Clair as Agnese. FATIMA HASAN

Opera on 3: Live from the Met 6.00pm Radio 3

American soprano Sondra Radvanovsky faces a stern challenge in the coming months, singing all three of Donizetti's Tudor Queens in a single season at the Met. The regal trilogy begins with Anna Bolena (Anne Boleyn) and will continue with Maria Stuarda (Mary Stuart) and Roberto Devereux, in which she plays Elizabeth I. Her Anna – tormented but pure – is the undoubted bel canto delight tonight but there's strong support from Russian bass baritone Ildar Abdrazakov as King Enrico (yes, that's Henry!) VIII. All three Tudor operas are staged by British director David McVicar. DAVID GILLARD

Today's Choices

Sunday Feature: Literary Pursuits

6.45pm Radio 3
Charles Dickens's most famous novel Great Expectations has long been a staple of the literary canon. The story of Pip, an impoverished orphan raised to become a gentleman by a mysterious benefactor, came to the writer as a "new and grotesque idea" – a twisted take on the loss of childhood innocence. But the origins of the story are troubling. Why for instance was the book serialised in just nine-and-a-half months? And what caused Dickens to lose confidence in his original ending? Sarah Dillon marks a new series with this intriguing investigation into the author's turbulent life. TOM GOULDING

Drama: East of Eden

3.00pm Radio 4
The Cain and Abel-style saga continues with further shocks about the moral turpitude of Cathy. Last week we discovered she had murdered her parents and possibly driven a schoolteacher to commit suicide. This week, unhappily married to the naive Adam, she abandons her twin baby sons and takes over a brothel, specialising in the most brutal sadomasochism. Her sons grow older and display frighteningly similar characteristics to their father and his brother – one good, one horrible. Adam eventually catches up with Cathy in the brothel in a heart-wrenching scene. This is all going to end in tears... JANE ANDERSON RADIO EDITOR

Today's Choices

The Untold

11.00am Radio 4

A series of stories about everyday folk is a much-needed counterpoint to the celebrity-centric nonsense we're bombarded with these days. It's brought to us by Grace Dent – the writer who has the enviable ability to find innumerable ways to be funny – here in serious mode. A young couple with two children living in a Basingstoke suburb seems redolent of domestic harmony. But Steve has a serious problem with gambling that has resulted in his partner Stacey kicking him out of the family home. He currently kips on his stepdad's sofa. Saying things like “you can't push your luck too far with women” may not be Steve's most endearing quality, and his refusal to get some counselling for his addiction might exasperate – yet in the end you're rooting for him to get back with Stacey. CHRIS GARDNER

The Essay: Listener, They Wore It

10.45pm Radio 3

For those who enjoy listening to Radio 3 broadcasters letting their hair down (or is it just me?), this series about iconic clothing is bliss. Rachel Cooke admits to swooning over the sailor shirts and pedal-pushers worn by Jean Seberg in the 1958 film Bonjour Tristesse while Stephen Bayley positively drools at the memory of Marcello Mastroianni's spectacles (the epitome of Italian cool) in Fellini's 8 1/2 (1963). The series is bookended by talks about white apparel – The Woman in White, The Wonderful Ice Cream Suite – that will make you think twice every time you wear it. DAVID MCGILLIVRAY

The Jazz Ambassadors of the Cold War

4.00pm Radio 4
America had troops on the ground in Syria decades ago. But then they were armed with trumpets and the only shots fired were off the rim. This is the intriguing story of the US State Department's cultural mission to send the great jazz musicians Dizzy Gillespie (above), Louis Armstrong, Dave Brubeck and Benny Goodman to countries of geopolitical importance during the Cold War. But as Julian Joseph hears from some fascinating contributors – including Gillespie's drummer Charlie Persip – this campaign of soft diplomacy was not wholly successful, as the musicians rebelled against promoting the image of America as a liberal wonderland when many of them still suffered under segregation. If you missed this when it first went out in October, it's a must for music fans and students of global politics. DAVID CRAWFORD

The Documentary: The Truth about Diabetes

5.30am and 7.30pm BBC World Service
As regular readers will know, I am a Type 1 diabetic and have been so for almost 40 years. It's something I have learnt to live with and manage through insulin injections, thanks to superb care from the National Health Service. Things are not so easy in Sri Lanka, however, where a tenth of the population are suspected to have Type 2 diabetes – controlled by diet, exercise and, in some cases, tablets – but many individuals do not even know they have it, leading to terrible complications. Barry Humphries: Barry's Forgotten Musical Masterpieces

Trawling one's childhood memories can be a bit of a mixed bag of emotions. Happily for Barry Humphries (above), aka Dame Edna Everage, Australia's housewife superstar, growing up in Melbourne during the 1930s and 40s was a captivating time – literally and figuratively. Beset by childhood illnesses, Humphries was enthralled by the music emerging from his parents' radio set, even more so when his mother placed the radio in his bedroom. So entranced was he by the music from artists like Fred Astaire, Flanagan and Allen, Judy Garland and Harry Roy that Humphries tried to make his illnesses last as long as possible. "Music was such an important part of my childhood... these artists were once star names, but are nowadays rarely, if ever, heard on the radio," he recalls of the vintage recordings. Read our interview with Barry Humphries on page 22.

FATIMA HASAN

Bad Salsa

11.30am Radio 4
Writer Kay Stonham's sitcom is about three women who met in cancer treatment and who, in recovery, started salsa dancing. This does not sound like the premise for fun, but Stonham invited women from the Ovarian Cancer Action supporters group to read the scripts for her first series and they assured her that she was on the right track. Talk of cancer makes an inevitable appearance but it does not dominate these strong women's lives – there are more laughs than tears.

Today's Choices

Radio 3 in Concert 7.30pm Radio 3

In 1933 the French composer Charles Koechlin saw his first film – The Blue Angel, starring Marlene Dietrich. He was 65-years-old and immediately entranced by “the formidable realm of the cinema”. Koechlin’s artistic response was the Seven Stars’ Symphony, a suitably swooning musical fan letter to the great screen idols of the day; each of its seven movements portrays a Hollywood icon. It’s played tonight by the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra under principal guest conductor Ilan Volkov. The programme also includes another movie tie-in, Dukas’s The Sorcerer’s Apprentice (indelibly associated with Disney’s Fantasia), and Unsuk Chin’s fiendishly virtuosic and sometimes percussive Clarinet Concerto, performed here by the Finnish clarinetist Kari Kriikku, who gave its world premiere in 2014. DAVID GILLARD

Bus Lines 11.30am Radio 4

I tell many young writers that, if they’re blocked, they should go out and get on a bus. I cannot estimate the number of ideas I have had on the top deck. Therefore it’s no surprise to me that a bus company sponsors a short story competition for its drivers, who have the capacity to be inspired all day or all night. We hear from a driver who noticed the irony of a hungry, homeless man in Glasgow’s Argyll Street watching youths throwing chips at each other, also of one who now feels she is ready to write a novel. Many bus drivers leave school with limited qualifications. It’s inspiring to listen to the stories of those encouraged to express themselves in prose. If you have tears... DAVID MCGILLIVRAY

2/10. Trumpeter and composer Guy Barker’s ambitious exploration of the history of jazz continues with a look at the change from collective to solo improvisation – a radical shift attributed arguably to iconic trumpeter Louis Armstrong (1901–71), whose recordings with his Hot Five – Cornet Chop Suey (1926), Potato Head Blues (1927) and West End Blues (1928) – took jazz to a new place. Featuring contributions from Armstrong, songwriter Hoagy Carmichael (1899–1991), pianist Earl “Fatha” Hines (1903–83), cornet player “Wild” Bill Davison (1906–89), saxophonist Budd Johnson (1910–84), band leader Artie Shaw (1910–2004), horn player Gunther Schuller (1925–2015), musician and composer Dick Hyman, critic Dan Morgenstern, musicologist Lewis Porter and historian Ted Gioia. Today's Choices

Friday Night Is Music Night 8.00pm Radio 2

Friday night is record-breaking night! Ken Bruce introduces a programme that marks the 60th anniversary of Guinness World Records with a show that celebrates a diversity of musical winners and an unlikely cast. So Elvis Presley (the artist with the most number one singles) rubs blue suede shoes with Andrew Lloyd Webber (The Phantom of the Opera, Broadway's longest running show), film composer John Williams (the most Oscar-nominated living person) and William Shakespeare (best-selling playwright!). There's also the world's largest orchestra with over 7,000 players (not the revered BBC Concert Orchestra, of course). FNIMN is itself a record breaker – the world's longest running orchestral radio programme. And Swedish virtuoso Robert Wells makes a record-breaking attempt tonight – the highest number of recognisable Abba (above) songs played in a minute on the piano.

Radio 3 in Concert 7.30pm Radio 3

An evocative journey of English yearning via George Butterworth's bittersweet, Housman-inspired "orchestral rhapsody" A Shropshire Lad and Elgar's Symphony No 2, dedicated to the memory of King Edward VII and described by the composer as "a passionate pilgrimage of the soul". In between, there's the UK premiere of British-born composer Anna Clyne's The Seamstress, a violin concerto that Clyne calls "an imaginary one-act ballet. Alone on the stage the seamstress is lost in her thoughts." It's played tonight by Jennifer Koh. DAVID GILLARD

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice

Nell Bryden BBC Radio 2

Current job A singer/songwriter and musician, she presents Nell's Angels (Monday 10pm Radio 2) and embarks on a UK tour in May.

CV Now based in London, she was born in New York and first performed her songs in Boston folk and rock clubs. Her debut album was released in 2003 and she presented New York Nights for Radio 2 in 2014.

Best moment "Discarding my wig. I lost my hair through alopecia in 2012 and wore a wig for a while. Now I'm happy to live my life without one."

Worst moment "While on tour in Ireland in 2007 I took a 14-hour bus ride to my next show and performed for 12 people in a bar while they watched football on TV. But the most terrible moment was witnessing the 9/11 attacks from my Manhattan apartment."

Off air "I'm lucky enough to have apartments in my two favourite cities – in the West Village, New York, and a garden flat in Little Venice, west London, where I live with my British husband Alistair, a property developer, our one-year-old daughter and our Cockapoo dog."

First radio memory "My Dad is a painter, sculptor and architect and I'd listen while he'd blast out the New York City rock station Z100 in his cavernous loft studio."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans, a master at running his circus, Ken Bruce with a voice like butter, and Terry Wogan, a chivalrous gentleman who oozes charm."

Dream job "As a UN Ambassador, dealing with political issues but not as a politician."

Secret skills "I love interior design and enjoy fixing up apartments with Alistair. And I've been surprising myself (and my husband) with my cooking lately – pea and prawn risotto, green tea salmon, and prawn and chorizo with lentils. Wow!" DAVID GILLARD

Face behind the voice

Nell Bryden BBC Radio 2

Age "38 – going on 14!"
Current job A singer/songwriter and musician, she presents Nell's Angels (Monday 10pm Radio 2) and embarks on

a UK tour in May.

CV Now based in London, she was born in New York and first performed her songs in Boston folk and rock clubs. Her debut album was released in 2003 and she presented New York Nights for Radio 2 in 2014.

Best moment "Discarding my wig. I lost my hair through alopecia in 2012 and wore a wig for a while. Now I'm happy to live my life without one."

Worst moment "While on tour in Ireland in 2007 I took a 14-hour bus ride to my next show and performed for 12 people in a bar while they watched football on TV. But the most terrible moment was witnessing the 9/11 attacks from my Manhattan apartment."
Off air "I'm lucky enough to have apartments in my two favourite cities – in the West Village, New York, and a garden flat in Little Venice, west London, where I live with my British husband Alistair, a property developer, our one-year-old daughter and our Cockapoo dog."

First radio memory "My Dad is a painter, sculptor and architect and I'd listen while he'd blast out the New York City rock station Z100 in his cavernous loft studio."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans, a master at running his circus, Ken Bruce with a voice like butter, and Terry Wogan, a chivalrous gentleman who oozes charm."

Ambition "To do more presenting. And one day I'm gonna write some books!"

Dream job "As a UN Ambassador, dealing with political issues but not as a politician."

Secret skills "I love interior design and enjoy fixing up apartments with Alistair. And I've been surprising myself (and my husband) with my cooking lately – pea and prawn risotto, green tea salmon, and prawn and chorizo with lentils. Wow!" DAVID GILLARD

Face behind the voice

Nell Bryden BBC Radio 2

Age "38 – going on 14!"
Current job A singer/songwriter and musician, she presents Nell's Angels (Monday 10pm Radio 2) and embarks on

a UK tour in May.

CV Now based in London, she was born in New York and first performed her songs in Boston folk and rock clubs. Her debut album was released in 2003 and she presented New York Nights for Radio 2 in 2014.

Best moment "Discarding my wig. I lost my hair through alopecia in 2012 and wore a wig for a while. Now I'm happy to live my life without one."

Worst moment "While on tour in Ireland in 2007 I took a 14-hour bus ride to my next show and performed for 12 people in a bar while they watched football on TV. But the most terrible moment was witnessing the 9/11 attacks from my Manhattan apartment."

Off air "I'm lucky enough to have apartments in my two favourite cities – in the West Village, New York, and a garden flat in Little Venice, west London, where I live with my British husband Alistair, a property developer, our one-year-old daughter and our Cockapoo dog."

First radio memory "My Dad is a painter, sculptor and architect and I'd listen while he'd blast out the New York City rock station Z100 in his cavernous loft studio."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans, a master at running his circus, Ken Bruce with a voice like butter, and Terry Wogan, a chivalrous gentleman who oozes charm."

Ambition "To do more presenting. And one day I'm gonna write some books!"
Dream job "As a UN Ambassador, dealing with political issues but not as a politician."

Secret skills "I love interior design and enjoy fixing up apartments with Alistair. And I've been surprising myself (and my husband) with my cooking lately – pea and prawn risotto, green tea salmon, and prawn and chorizo with lentils. Wow!" DAVID GILLARD

BBC Radio Scotland

Face behind the voice

Nell Bryden BBC Radio 2

Age "38 – going on 14!"
Current job A singer/songwriter and musician, she presents Nell's Angels (Monday 10pm Radio 2) and embarks on

a UK tour in May.

CV Now based in London, she was born in New York and first performed her songs in Boston folk and rock clubs. Her debut album was released in 2003 and she presented New York Nights for Radio 2 in 2014.

Best moment "Discarding my wig. I lost my hair through alopecia in 2012 and wore a wig for a while. Now I'm happy to live my life without one."

Worst moment "While on tour in Ireland in 2007 I took a 14-hour bus ride to my next show and performed for 12 people in a bar while they watched football on TV. But the most terrible moment was witnessing the 9/11 attacks from my Manhattan apartment."

Off air "I'm lucky enough to have apartments in my two favourite cities – in the West Village, New York, and a garden flat in Little Venice, west London, where I live with my British husband Alistair, a property developer, our one-year-old daughter and our Cockapoo dog."

First radio memory "My Dad is a painter, sculptor and architect and I'd listen while he'd blast out the New York City rock station Z100 in his cavernous loft studio."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans, a master at running his circus, Ken Bruce with a voice like butter, and Terry Wogan, a chivalrous gentleman who oozes charm."

Ambition "To do more presenting. And one day I'm gonna write some books!"

Dream job "As a UN Ambassador, dealing with political issues but not as a politician."

Secret skills "I love interior design and enjoy fixing up apartments with Alistair. And I've been surprising myself (and my husband) with my cooking lately – pea and prawn risotto, green tea salmon, and prawn and chorizo with lentils. Wow!" DAVID GILLARD

Face behind the voice

Nell Bryden BBC Radio 2

Age "38 – going on 14!"
Current job A singer/songwriter and musician, she presents Nell's Angels (Monday 10pm Radio 2) and embarks on

a UK tour in May.

CV Now based in London, she was born in New York and first performed her songs in Boston folk and rock clubs. Her debut album was released in 2003 and she presented New York Nights for Radio 2 in 2014.

Best moment "Discarding my wig. I lost my hair through alopecia in 2012 and wore a wig for a while. Now I'm happy to live my life without one."

Worst moment "While on tour in Ireland in 2007 I took a 14-hour bus ride to my next show and performed for 12 people in a bar while they watched football on TV. But the most terrible moment was witnessing the 9/11 attacks from my Manhattan apartment."

Off air "I'm lucky enough to have apartments in my two favourite cities – in the West Village, New York, and a garden flat in Little Venice, west London, where I live with my British husband Alistair, a property developer, our one-year-old daughter and our Cockapoo dog."

First radio memory "My Dad is a painter, sculptor and architect and I'd listen while he'd blast out the New York City rock station Z100 in his cavernous loft studio."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans, a master at running his circus, Ken Bruce with a voice like butter, and Terry Wogan, a chivalrous gentleman who oozes charm."

Ambition "To do more presenting. And one day I'm gonna write some books!"

Dream job "As a UN Ambassador, dealing with political issues but not as a politician."

Secret skills "I love interior design and enjoy fixing up apartments with Alistair. And I've been surprising myself (and my husband) with my cooking lately – pea and prawn risotto, green tea salmon, and prawn and chorizo with lentils. Wow!" DAVID GILLARD

Face behind the voice

Nell Bryden BBC Radio 2

Age "38 – going on 14!"
Current job A singer/songwriter and musician, she presents Nell's Angels (Monday 10pm Radio 2) and embarks on

a UK tour in May.

CV Now based in London, she was born in New York and first performed her songs in Boston folk and rock clubs. Her debut album was released in 2003 and she presented New York Nights for Radio 2 in 2014.

Best moment "Discarding my wig. I lost my hair through alopecia in 2012 and wore a wig for a while. Now I'm happy to live my life without one."

Worst moment "While on tour in Ireland in 2007 I took a 14-hour bus ride to my next show and performed for 12 people in a bar while they watched football on TV. But the most terrible moment was witnessing the 9/11 attacks from my Manhattan apartment."

Off air "I'm lucky enough to have apartments in my two favourite cities – in the West Village, New York, and a garden flat in Little Venice, west London, where I live with my British husband Alistair, a property developer, our one-year-old daughter and our Cockapoo dog."

First radio memory "My Dad is a painter, sculptor and architect and I'd listen while he'd blast out the New York City rock station Z100 in his cavernous loft studio."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans, a master at running his circus, Ken Bruce with a voice like butter, and Terry Wogan, a chivalrous gentleman who oozes charm."

Ambition "To do more presenting. And one day I'm gonna write some books!"

Dream job "As a UN Ambassador, dealing with political issues but not as a politician."

Secret skills "I love interior design and enjoy fixing up apartments with Alistair. And I've been surprising myself (and my husband) with my cooking lately – pea and prawn risotto, green tea salmon, and prawn and chorizo with lentils. Wow!" DAVID GILLARD

DONAL SKEHAN'S

Cajun chicken with sweet potato mash

This dish is simple but makes a truly delicious supper – the sweet and exotic flavour of sweet potato and fresh coriander take it to another level.

- 200g tenderstem broccoli
- 2 skinless chicken breasts (about 150g each)
- 1 tsp rapeseed oil
- 1 tbsp smoked paprika
- 1 tsp cayenne pepper
- 1 tsp garlic powder
- 3 thyme sprigs, leaves picked
- Sea salt and freshly ground black pepper

FOR THE MASH

- 2–4 sweet potatoes, peeled and diced
- 1 tbsp coconut oil
- Large handful of coriander, roughly chopped

1 Start preparing the sweet potato mash. Place the sweet potato in a metal steamer in a pan of simmering water and steam for 10–12 minutes or until just tender. You can add the broccoli for the last 5 minutes of cooking time. Remove the broccoli and keep warm.

2 Transfer the sweet potato to a mixing bowl and use a fork to roughly smash the sweet potato together with the coconut oil and coriander. Season with salt and pepper and keep warm.

3 Butterfly the chicken: place a chicken breast on a chopping board and, with your hand flat on the top of it, use a sharp knife to slice into the thickest part of the breast. Do not slice all the way through. Open out the chicken so it resembles a butterfly and repeat with the other chicken breast.

4 Lay the butterflied chicken on a plate and rub with rapeseed oil. Sprinkle all over with paprika, cayenne pepper, garlic powder, thyme leaves and season with salt and black pepper.

5 Place a large griddle pan over a high heat and cook the chicken for 3–4 minutes on each side, or until cooked all the way through. Serve the chicken with the sweet potato mash and tenderstem broccoli.

THE GOOD FOOD DIET
Dr Xand van Tulleken with his co-presenter, dietician Hala El-Shafie

Monday 8.00pm Channel 4

SOME MONTHS AGO, I decided to go on a crash diet. As I'm a doctor and I was about to film Channel 4's How to Lose Weight Well, it seems I'm also a hypocrite who loves irony. Doing a show on healthy weight loss while making drastic changes to my diet for quick results forced me to confront just how much health professionals hate "diets".

The diets I'm talking about are temporary changes to eating habits. But health professionals don't want temporary change. We doctors always tell people (to quote the NHS website): "Avoid fad diets... the only way to lose weight healthily and keep it off is to make permanent changes to the way you eat and exercise."

Great advice in theory, but is it realistic? I would love to see my patients eat better and exercise more – I'd love to do it myself! – but we're only human and it's hard to stay trim all the time. Sometimes we just want to look our best for a special occasion: a wedding, a beach holiday, a school reunion or, worst of all, presenting a TV show about dieting. There's a huge diet industry that says this is reasonable, and a huge medical industry that says it isn't. So which is right?

Ideally you'll make lifelong healthy changes, but if you don't, finding good advice backed by medical evidence on how to lose weight quickly is difficult. The truth is that not all fad-diets are created equal, but the sheer range of options is too huge and too complicated for most people to choose one confidently. I surveyed hundreds for the programme and it was exhausting, and sometimes unexpected.

So here I'm offering some easy-to-follow tips that worked for me as a doctor... and as a human being who occasionally wants to look a bit better than I really am!

KEEP A DIARY

Use an app or a diary to record everything you eat and drink – and be completely honest. You should be able to identify a few things that are holding you back. For me, it was the snacks I ate when I got home from work.

SOME FOODS MAKE YOU HUNGRY

Sugary foods such as chocolate bars and soft drinks can make you hungrier than if you'd eaten nothing at all. If you need a snack, aim for something that will deal with your body's craving for sugar, but suppress your appetite for longer. Stick to about 150 calories: I like an apple and a few almonds.

Take the doctor's diet!

TRICK YOUR STOMACH

Foods that have few calories per 100g, such as vegetables and fruit, are a great way of filling up. My rule of thumb is to make vegetables count for two-thirds of every plate at lunch and dinner. Among my favourites are stir-fried kale, cabbage or broccoli, with a stock cube or some soy sauce thrown in.

TRICK YOUR BRAIN

Having a full stomach doesn't always make you stop eating: we've all had the experience of continuing to consume calories long after we feel fit to burst. But protein is great at suppressing appetite-increasing hormones so that you don't want to eat more. Aim to fill about a third of your plate with protein (meat or fish – or tofu if you're vegetarian).

ALCOHOL IS THE ENEMY

Alcohol has a lot of calories – and, more importantly, it impairs your decision-making. It's much harder to say no to a pudding after a few drinks – and a fry-up is almost irresistible when you have a hangover. For rapid weight loss, I'd recommend cutting out booze entirely.

EXERCISE WITH CARE

A work-out can stimulate your appetite and also make you feel that you've earned the right to some extra dinner. That said, I try to exercise regularly – the health benefits are undeniable.

GO EASY WITH THE BLENDER

Blending fruit and vegetables releases their sugars much more quickly, destroys much of the fibre that keeps you full, and means you can eat them so quickly that you're ready for more food very soon.

BEWARE ADDICTIVE FOODS

Some processed foods are designed to make you eat a lot of them. Studies show that ice cream affects the brain's reward system in almost the same way as cocaine. For fast weight loss, cut out all processed foods: they're almost impossible to stop eating.

NEVER TAKE DIET PILLS

High-street diet pills don't work at all and some of those offered on the internet are extremely dangerous. Stay well away from all of them.

OVERINDULGED OVER THE FESTIVE PERIOD?

If you feel like you've overdone the fatty, sugary foods over the holidays, it might be time to treat your body to a gentler regime.

Dr Nick Read, a gastroenterologist and medical adviser to the IBS Network Charity, says our bodies are efficient at dealing with short-term overindulgence. But if you've been experiencing heartburn, constipation or are feeling bloated you might want to make some changes.

EAT SOUP Vegetable soups are high in fibre and vitamins, low in fat and are meals in themselves, with a low calorie content.

CUT DOWN ON ALCOHOL Have at least two alcohol-free days a week. You will save on calories and sleep better, too.

NO QUICK FIX DETOX Avoid detox diets that cut out essential nutrients, and aren't sustainable in the long term.

SHORT-TERM DIETS THAT (MOSTLY) WORK...

There is good medical evidence supporting the effectiveness of the 5:2 diet (so-called because you "fast", on around 500 calories for women, 600 for men, for two days each week). It's a good diet – and not just for weight loss – but not many people can stick to it for long.

The strangest diet I came across was the KEN diet (Ketogenic Enteral Nutrition). The idea came from a doctor's observation that patients fed through nasal tubes have virtually no appetite. It involves the insertion of a small tube down your nose and into your stomach: you then wear a pump in a backpack that drip-feeds you, 24 hours a day, for ten days. Weight loss is rapid (5kg to 10kg) as you consume almost no calories, and patients describe few or no symptoms of hunger. It sounds extreme – and certainly having a tube taped to your nose for ten days isn't for everyone – but it worked well as a quick fix.

RT Bookshop To order Michael Mosley's most recent 5:2 book, The Fast Diet, in paperback for £7.59 (usually £7.99) plus £1.25 p&p, call 01326 555752 or visit radiotimes.com/fastdiet02

HAPPY MOTORING
The cost of maintaining your car can mount up

AVOID LARGE CAR REPAIR BILLS WITH A CAR WARRANTY

Cover your car from as little as £15 per month[†]

There are enough day-to-day costs to think about without having to worry about large bills that can suddenly crop up. Garage bills can add up to hundreds, sometimes thousands of pounds, but where do you get the money from? And what would you do without your car?

The Radio Times Car Warranty service provided by Warranty Direct is offering you the chance to purchase an extended warranty from as little as £15 per month – say goodbye to those costly visits to the mechanic.

When choosing an extended warranty, you must be aware that the level of cover offered as standard differs from provider to provider. It's important that you check what guarantees are promised before you purchase a policy. Most new cars come with a three-year warranty. Some claim to extend beyond that, but often the cover is reduced. This leaves you to foot the bill.

Read through our tips to ensure that you get the most from your cover and, most importantly, that it pays out when you make a claim.

OUR TOP CAR WARRANTY TIPS

- Do not assume, if you have a problem-free car now, that it won't need repairs some time in the future.
- Diagnosis is sometimes more expensive than parts. If your warranty doesn't cover reasonable diagnostic time it could end up costing you a fortune.
- Choose a comprehensive policy that covers your car for wear and tear as it ages – whether termed "premature", "normal" or "gradual" – as well as manufacturing defects. Check, too, that you'll be covered for any faults that are found at a service or MOT.
- Check that damage caused by a non-insured part is covered. For example, alternator belts are not usually insured, but if your car's alternator belt fails and causes the timing belt to break, this can quickly destroy a whole engine, so your warranty should pay out.

- Be aware of the exclusions. An extended warranty will always exclude consumable items such as wheels, tyres, exhausts, batteries, worn-out clutches and brakes, as well as damage to bodywork and paintwork.
- Check your claim limits. Look for a provider that covers up to at least £5,000. Or, better still, the full value of your vehicle at the time of your claim.

MAKE SURE YOUR POLICY IS INSURED

This gives you the rights to the Financial Ombudsman Service (FOS) in the event of any disputes. It will also provide you with protection from the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS), which can provide compensation if the insurer is unable to continue trading.

The Radio Times Car Warranty service provided by Warranty Direct covers cars up to 12 years of age and with up to 120,000 miles on the clock. Labour costs are always paid in full, regardless of your car's age, but if your car is older than six years or has driven more than 60,000 miles, you will receive a percentage towards other costs depending on the vehicle's age and mileage at the time of breakdown.

A better deal for drivers

Save more than £200 on car insurance thanks to new rules

INSURANCE FIRMS ARE going to be forced to tell us how much more they're charging when they send out renewal notices for motor insurance. They'll also have to remind us to make sure our cover is what we need and that we may be able to get a better deal if we look at other firms.

When the new rules come into force, renewal notices will have to state: "Your renewal quote this year is £450; last year's premium was £390. That is £60 more than last year."

The insurer will not have to say why it has gone up, just that it has. The new Financial Conduct Authority regulations will also apply to other general insurance products covering your home and its contents, insuring your pet, travel insurance or private medical care.

The FCA hopes the new rules will discourage insurers from what has been called "premium creep" – rising premiums, year by year, despite customers staying loyal and not switching to another provider.

Katherine contacted me at Radio 4's Money Box to say that her car insurance premiums had been going up every year. But after two rises of 40 per cent and then 45 per cent she'd had enough and informed her insurer that she would be ending the policy. Magically, the insurer came back with a revised estimate, "decreased to almost last year's cost".

'One Money Box listener reduced his premium from £904 to £346'

If the insurer refuses to give a better price, then switching to another company is the only option. Another listener, Andrew, had been a loyal customer of his bank, taking its insurance for ten years. But when his premium hit £904, he thought it time to look online and found the same cover for just £346.

Some insurers are taking advantage of the fact that a car has to be insured. They offer automatic renewal as a way to make certain we're never left without cover. We need do nothing, we're told, and the insurance will continue – but it can be at a price. Comparison sites claim that motorists can save more than £200 on an annual policy by finding the cheapest rather than going with the auto-renewal.

BREAKDOWN
Basil Fawley loses it – but did he lose out on insurance?

INSURANCE FIRMS SAY they're keen to make the change. But the Association of British Insurers says it will take between 18 months and two years to implement. First, it must wait for the regulator to produce detailed rules some time after March. So it could be 2018 before this useful information is actually seen in our renewal notices.

For now, the rule must be to check your renewal notice. Go online to see if you can find cheaper cover. And switch. That is what consumer power is all about.

For more information, go to fca.org.uk and search for CP15/41.

UNTAXED CARS

Spot the tax dodger

It was run-down, had empty cups and old clothes in it, with months of ingrained dirt on its paintwork and windscreen. And it was outside my house. If a car isn't taxed, the local council will tow it away. But was this one?

Now that tax discs have gone, the DVLA website allows anyone to check on the status of any vehicle. All you need is a car's registration number and the make. Enter those details to find out if the offensive motor is taxed and if it has a current MOT certificate (required for vehicles more than three years old).

There is also a Motor Insurance database to find out if your own vehicle is insured. That search is free, but searching for another vehicle, perhaps after an accident (and with some restrictions), costs £4.

- Tax and MOT: visit gov.uk and search "vehicle information"
- Insurance (with conditions): go to askMID.com
- Abandoned vehicles: gov.uk and search "abandoned vehicles"

Barnsley's Cleopatra

The wonders of ancient Egypt are easy to unearth, says Joann Fletcher. Just visit Bolton, Wigan or Oxford

Immortal Egypt with Joann Fletcher
Monday 9.00pm BBC2

REACTION TO THE recent news that the tomb of Tutankhamun may still conceal hidden chambers makes it clear that the west's fascination with ancient Egypt remains as strong as ever. And while much of this is based on the allure of a destination far away in both time and place, ancient Egypt is often far closer than you think, for there are more than 200 collections of Egyptian artefacts around Britain.

Although westerners were already venturing out to Egypt by the 17th century, the real turning point in Europe's relationship with the land of the Nile came in 1798, when Napoleon invaded Egypt with an army of both soldiers and scholars. And this potent combination soon proved invaluable when a large stone slab was discovered during the building of coastal defences at Rosetta. Carved with an ancient decree written in both Greek and Egyptian script and now dubbed "the Rosetta Stone", it provided the means of deciphering the long-dead hieroglyphic script in 1822.

Yet the celebrated stone was only part of a spectacular haul of antiquities the French had collected, destined for the Louvre in Paris until seized by the British as spoils of war in 1801, and shipped off to London's British Museum, where they can be seen today.

Indeed, the British Museum is still very much the place to go in order to engage with the more grandiose aspect of Egypt's ancient past, not to mention the mummified dead in its famous mummy rooms. But for a more intimate picture of real life in ancient Egypt, it's hard to beat the nearby Petrie Museum of Egyptian Archaeology. Packed with over 80,000 of the most extraordinary ancient items (woolly socks, suits of armour and soft toys), there is everything from "the world's oldest dress", found inside-out from the last time it was taken off some 5,000 years ago, to the most touching correspondence in which a woman writes to her late husband in a so-called "letter to the dead".

But of course ancient Egypt can also be found far beyond London. As wealthy 19th-century northern industrialists began to support excavations in return for a percentage of finds made, their generosity in donating such things not only benefited the larger museum collections of Leeds, Sheffield, Newcastle, Manchester, Liverpool and Edinburgh but rather less well-known places, which are increasingly the source of new discoveries helping us rewrite what we thought we knew about ancient Egypt. Here are five fascinating regional treasures.

1 ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA IN BARNSELEY

Perhaps one of the most significant finds of Egyptian-related material in an unexpected place is a collection of coins minted by Cleopatra's husband Mark Antony in 31 BC, in order to pay the troops who would fight for the couple at the naval battle of Actium that same year. The silver coins were part of several large hoards found in Darfield in Barnsley in the 1940s during the construction of a housing

EVERYTHING YOU NEED YOU HAVE GERAD KITE

"Being human can be tough," declares Gerad Kite in the opening chapter of Everything You Need You Have (£11.69 incl p&p).

Kite – an "acupuncture master" – is on a mission to help out us struggling humans by encouraging us to look inwards to find happiness and self-fulfilment. His positive-thinking mantra has been embraced by stars such as new Top Gear host Chris Evans. The famously bouncy presenter says of Kite, "If the world woke up to what he knows, wow, that would be something."

THE VANISHING MAN: IN PURSUIT OF VELÁZQUEZ LAURA CUMMING

Book of the Week Mon-Fri 9.45am Radio 4

Twin mysteries lie at the heart of this dual biography (£16.99, incl p&p), which explores the enduring magic of the work of 17th-century Spanish painter Diego Velázquez. Alongside the artist's own life, Laura Cumming recounts that of John Snare, a Reading bookseller who, in 1845, stumbled upon what he thought was a Velázquez portrait and spent the rest of his life trying to prove its worth. The first mystery is what happened to the precious painting, which Snare took with him to London, then Edinburgh, and finally New York; the second is just what made Snare choose to give up his livelihood and his family rather than relinquish it.

THE LONG ROOM FRANCESCA KAY

Open Book Sunday 4pm Radio 4

In the award-winning Francesca Kay's latest novel (£13.49, incl p&p), it is 1981, and in London Stephen Donaldson works for the Institute, spending his days, and much of his nights, listening to the lives of other people; he knows what they eat for dinner, what they watch on television, what they play on the piano. He likes to listen to one person in particular – Helen, the wife of one of the Institute's targets – and revels in their unequal intimacy, even falls in love. Soon he can't help but try and close the distance between them – but he must take ever greater risks to do so.

3 MUMMY WRAPPINGS IN BOLTON

Fragmentary linen mummy wrappings discovered at Mostagedda in southern Egypt in the 1920s were sent to Bolton Museum and placed in storage. But only recently did scientific analysis reveal that the wrappings had been coated with an antibacterial tree resin as long ago as around 4,300 BC – almost 2,000 years before mummification is supposed to have begun in Egypt.

4 THE GOLDEN MASK OF WIGAN

Last year, artefacts covering the entire 3,000-year span of ancient Egyptian history were rediscovered during the relocation of museum stores in Wigan. With the star piece a gilded head from the coffin of a noblewoman from around the time of Tutankhamun, her beautiful smile now welcomes visitors as part of the exhibition Ancient Egypt Rediscovered at the Museum of Wigan Life.

5 THE WORLD'S OLDEST BIKE RACK

One of the finest statues of Egypt's great state god Amun spent more than a century in the basement of Southampton Museum, where staff had apparently leaned their bikes against it. Eventually identified as a long-lost statue of the god made around 670 BC, one newspaper described it as "the world's oldest bike rack", and it can now be seen in Oxford's Ashmolean Museum, where it's on loan.

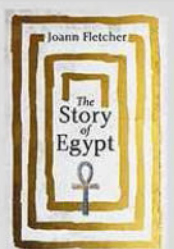

With treasures like these now on public display, grumbles that such exotic artefacts "have nothing to do with local history" ignore the fact they were either found in the local area or in most cases collected and donated by local people. And as more of Egypt's ancient past continues to be uncovered around the country, regional museums are the perfect place to inspire future generations while allowing us to enjoy a heritage that surely belongs to everyone.

2 THE JACKAL GOD OF HARROGATE

As the highlight of a private collection once displayed in a Yorkshire farmhouse until it was bequeathed to Harrogate corporation in 1968, a unique mask of the black jackal god Anubis was originally made for a priest to wear to imitate the god during sacred rites in the early centuries BC. With its rediscovery in storage making headlines in 2002, the mask inspired the headwear for a Dior couture show. Briefly loaned to the V&A as part of an exhibition by milliner Stephen Jones, it is back on display at Harrogate's Royal Pump Room Museum.

Planning your funeral now means to worry about

WHEN IT COMES TO YOUR FUNERAL, IT PAYS TO PLAN AHEAD

With a funeral plan from Golden Charter, it's easy to save money and help your family avoid financial worry in the future

We all enjoy doing things for our family. And often it's the little things that mean the most. It could even be something as simple as covering the cost of your funeral in advance. A Golden Charter Funeral Plan lets you specify your wishes, and take care of the funeral director's costs included in the plan, at today's prices. So it's a way to help avoid the ever-rising cost of funerals, and get peace of mind. Not just for yourself, but for your family, too.

SUPPORT WHEN IT MATTERS MOST

As the UK's largest funeral plan provider, Golden Charter works with the country's widest network of independent funeral directors. With over 3,300 local funeral directors to choose from, you can be certain that your family will receive a truly personal service and support when it really matters.

WHY ACT NOW?

Since 2004, funeral costs have risen by 92 per cent . At that rate, a simple funeral that costs £3,693 today could rise to well over £6,700 by 2025. With Golden Charter you can fix the cost of the funeral director's services included in your plan at current prices. So no matter how much prices rise in the future, there'll be nothing more for your family to pay for those services later on – guaranteed.

EASY WAYS TO PAY

Golden Charter offers a range of ways to cover the cost of your plan. You can pay in full or spread the cost over a number of years with their unique low-cost instalment option. Or choose fixed monthly payments, with no deposit required.

Payments start from as little as 35p per day †. You'll find out more in the Golden Charter information pack.

Plan prices will rise on 1 April 2016.

Act now and you could save up to £301 on the price of your plan*.

Who was the real McCoy? Rebecca Langley by email

If something is the real McCoy, it is the genuine article. Most histories will claim that the man behind the phrase was the US boxing champion Norman Selby, who fought under the name of Charles "Kid" McCoy and who won the 1897 world middleweight title.

McCoy was celebrated for his theatrical style of fighting. Wannabees across America entered show-fights pretending to be McCoy, so he was obliged to call himself the "real" deal.

But the expression's real origins lie in 19th-century Scotland, where a brand of whisky distilled by G Mackay & Co was sold under the slogan "A drappie o' the real McKay". It's here that the expression took hold, although Charles McCoy shouldn't be forgotten: it was probably down to him that the spelling shifted from McKay to McCoy.

WHAT WE WATCHED

2008 12-18 JANUARY

Readers will remember fondly Lark Rise to Candleford, whose stars Olivia Hallinan, Julia Sawalha and Dawn French posed in costume for the RT cover. Inside, Stephen Fry shared his views on the difference between being typecast or just suitable for a role, and his personal engagement with the documentaries he makes. "Without getting too sententious about it, if you have had the good fortune to have done the things I have done and to have had the experiences I have had, not to share them where they can be useful is just mean."

1998 10-16 JANUARY

EastEnders's Gillian Taylforth posed as Veronica Lake for a black and white old-Hollywood style cover, which was much at odds with the rabble of Albert Square. She told Andrew Duncan that at times, her own life mirrored that of her colourful character Kathy Beale. "At one point I thought of suicide. Whichever way I turned there were problems, or another smutty joke."

1988 9-15 JANUARY

Dirk Bogarde and Lee Remick graced the cover ahead of their BBC Two film, The Vision, which followed an anchorman drawn into the sinister dealings of a corrupt TV network.

The show marked the return to the BBC for Bogarde after a 40-year break, and also starred a 21-year-old Helena Bonham-Carter, who said of the actor, "He's such a great storyteller."

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Give us live ballet

STAR TURN
Carlos Acosta and Marianela Nuñez in Carmen

I'm so disappointed in Tony Hall. I thought when he became BBC director-general there would be better coverage of the arts, especially opera and ballet, but no. There are ballet documentaries, but with a "celebrity" angle, mainly focusing on Darcey Bussell and Carlos Acosta. Great to see both of them – but it would have been far better to see actual live performances. Even Acosta's Carmen (Christmas Day BBC4) was only a third of a mixed bill. Why couldn't the BBC show all of it?

There are six ballets being filmed for the cinema in this performance year (September to June), so why can't the BBC show some of these? I know ballet is a minority interest, but surely one of two full-length performances a year isn't too much to ask for?

PURE

STRICTLY A JOY

In a world of sleaze in high places, the threat of terrorism, crime, poverty, debt and illness, we can sometimes feel overwhelmed by a drip feed of bad news. Into this dreary feeling flashed Strictly Come Dancing, and what a joy – from the fabulous costumes to the sets, the music, the talent and the laughter.

I watched the final (19 December BBC1) and felt my spirits lifting – I'm sure everyone else who watched did too. So thank you to the BBC, to Tess Daly and Claudia Winkleman, to judges Len Goodman, Craig Revel Horwood, Darcey Bussell and Bruno Tonioli, to the wonderful orchestra and the fabulous dancers – and of course to 2015 champions Jay and Aliona. A huge, beautiful box of pure Christmas magic – a perfect TEN!
Mark Perry Nash Pulborough, West Sussex

CUFFS HELD ME CAPTIVE

The police drama Cuffs (BBC1) had some mediocre reviews, but I enjoyed every minute, from the beautiful filming – especially the aerial shots – of Brighton, where the sun seemed always to shine, to the clever casting of such interesting characters. This was truly a "cop drama" with a difference!

Wendy Hardy Uffculme, Devon

...Superlative acting from Ashley Walters, Jacob Ifan and the entire cast – easily deserving to follow in the great tradition of Hill Street Blues and The Bill.

Give us more please – and soon!
David Parker
Harrow, north-west London
Sorry to disappoint you, but there will be no second series – shortly after the series finale on 16 December, members of the cast began tweeting the news.

LOST THE PLOT

I was appalled by the EastEnders plotline about Cora's homelessness (15 December BBC1), which painted council officials as uninterested and enjoying a Christmas lunch while others suffer – and then, after one protest, were able to produce a home for her immediately like a rabbit out of a hat.

It was irresponsible, and disrespectful both to those looking for a home and to cash-strapped councils doing their best at times of massive cuts.

Susan Raisbeck Clevedon, Somerset

A BBC spokesperson responds: "This episode was part of a long-running storyline involving Cora Cross. EastEnders has a long history of reflecting social issues but, being a drama, the outcomes for characters can vary and the main point of Cora's story was her family and friends rallying round and doing everything they could to help find a home for Christmas."

SOBBING FOR SAGA

By 11pm on 19 December I was a wreck. Why? The Bridge (BBC4) came to its traumatic end. My sobs were not so racking as Saga's, but it was a close thing. I've followed her through all three series, and come to love her more than almost any other TV character in my memory, thanks to the marvellous acting of Sofia Helin.

The Bridge has been an often grim, gory watch, but I wouldn't have missed it for the world. And as for that haunting theme song...

Glyn Morrow York

...Thank you BBC for another superb series of The Bridge. Sofia Helin's exquisite portrayal of Saga Noren is breathtaking and she deserves every award going: the plot is almost secondary to the character study of Saga and her struggle to deal with everyday emotions and interactions that most of us take in our stride. All the characters are so well drawn, with no weak links. What amazing writing! Please may we have more dramas like this.

CHEAP TACTICS

Recently in Bargain Hunt (BBC1) one of the competitors, when he was negotiating with the seller of an antique, said that he only had £32 left in his kitty, when in fact he had more than £200 to spend.

I know this isn't the first time this practice has occurred; it's not funny, it's not clever and it lacks integrity.

The producers have a responsibility to ensure that all that happens in Bargain Hunt is above board and should put a stop to this deceitful practice.

John Marriott Sway, Hampshire
A spokesperson for Bargain Hunt replies: "Thank you for bringing this matter to our attention. This programme was a repeat and made several years ago. Since then we have changed our editorial policy on how our teams negotiate prices. Now they are asked to always truthfully reflect the actual amount of money they have left in their budget."

British astronaut Tim Peake arrives at the International Space Station

PEAKING MY INTEREST

In 1969 my wife and I stayed up all night to see the first Moon landing, when Apollo 11 put Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin down safely on the lunar surface.

It was with an equal sense of wonder and emotion that we watched Tim Peake and his two colleagues enter the International Space Station (15 December BBC2). The coverage was first class. Dara O Briain and Brian Cox are a great team.

RT'S TAX RETURN

I always enjoy reading RT, but Paul Lewis's piece on the marriage allowance (RT, 12 December) was of special interest. He gave all the details needed to apply to transfer some of my unused tax allowance to my husband.

I went on to the Government website he mentioned, completed the application form and was immediately informed by email that my application had been successful. All this accomplished in less than five minutes. We'll now be £212 per year better off. Result! Thanks Paul and RT!

THE EINSTEIN ENIGMA

Having read in RT that Inside Einstein's Mind: the Enigma of Space and Time (14 December BBC4) "may be too basic for some", it sounded just at my level!

Yet the one fact I thought I knew about Einstein was that he was left-handed, so how come the actor was writing with his right hand?

Angela Jenner

Etwall, Derbyshire

MAN UP, PETER

As much as I love Peter Capaldi in Doctor Who (BBC1), I disagree with him about a male companion (RT, 19 December). They could play it for laughs – have them charging into danger, and get some witty banter out of it ("Sit tight, old man, I got this!" ... "Don't you 'old man' me, sonny boy!").

I know everything is tricky business in the Whoniverse, but please, don't be so quick to dismiss the idea of a male companion.

Roger Allam

Endeavour's boss wants to enlist Cary Grant...

What's your must-see TV?

I'm not that loyal because I'm often in plays in the evening. So I get a lot of programmes stacking up. But I try to keep up with interesting dramas that come along: I thought Stellan Skarsgård was wonderful in River. I enjoyed Unforgotten. And I always watch Ripper Street.

Do you have a guilty TV pleasure?

Well, very occasionally, I'll dip into Embarrassing Bodies, just because it's such a weird phenomenon. Seeing someone who, for instance, has a cat flap over their bottom seeking advice on television! It's so odd. I mean, their problem might get solved, but the price seems high.

What's your earliest TV memory?

Oh, this is going to date me. Dim and distant memories of The Army Game and children's programmes like Four Feather Falls. We'd also watch The Forsyte Saga together as a family. And I was one of those children who'd hide when Doctor Who started.

Have you ever done Doctor Who?

What do you watch with your own family?

I have two sons, aged 15 and ten, and I recently introduced them to Fawlty Towers. That was such a pleasure because they both loved it. It's just so beautifully constructed – each one is like a mini French farce.

Who was your first TV crush?

It would have been Diana Rigg in The Avengers, which I used to love.

Who could play you in a biopic of your life?

Ha – there are probably loads of people who could. But, ideally, Cary Grant.

QUICKFIRE Q&A

1. ~~BBC News~~ or Sky News?

2. Strictly or I'm a Celebrity?
Strictly. I wouldn't choose to watch it on my own, but for a time it was the family's choice.

3. ~~Graham Norton~~ or Jonathan Ross?

What makes you turn the TV off?

Too much music in TV drama. Music is an essential part, but it drives me mad when you get lots of music that's saying, "Ooh, this is exciting".

Do you wake up to radio or TV?

If I'm on my own, then I'll have Radio 3 or Radio 4 on. The whole breakfast television thing felt very odd to me when it started and I've never really shifted from that view.

How high does TV come on your list of cultural pursuits?

When TV is at its best, it's as good as absolutely anything. If I'm gripped by a really good drama, I'll make sure I'll see it by whatever means.

Can you remember the moment that turned you on to acting?

I was 16 and I went on my own to the theatre to see Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead at the Old Vic. You could get a seat in the gallery for 15 pence, which was the same price as your Tube fare. And I was watching this drama unfold live before my eyes – the whole experience just caught me. Partly it was the smell of the place and that mixture of glamour and tawdriness. But also the feeling I was unlocking the city in which I was living. Here was a place that I could go to see the likes of Laurence Olivier and Paul Scofield, live. For 15 pence. It was just glorious. DAVID BROWN
